sionary Schools-Relations of the Missionaries With the Natives.

Rev. D. MacRae, who has been in St. Jchn this week addressing the meetings of the Presbyterial, talked briefly to the Star yesterday of some of the phases of his work in Korea, where he has lived for the past eight years as a missionary of the Presbyterian church. He said that the Koreans are waking up to recognize the value of western education and are showing a positive thirst for information. This tendency has been stimulated and partly gratified by the schools conducted by the missionaries, but their facilities are far too small to begin to meet the demand for western education. The Japanese have also opened schools, but as the teachers do not talk Korean, most of their energies are bent to teaching the natives to talk Japaneses. One feature of the educational work carried on by the missionaries that has proved most successful was that in connection with the mission hospitals, of which there are half a dozen throughout the country. A class for medical students has been conducted and last year the first graduates secured their diplomas. The course of study is a hard one and the time occupied is longer than in eastern colleges.

the time occupied is longer than in eastern colleges.
Speaking of the relations between the missionaries and the Koreans, Mr. Mac-Rae said that their position was one which no other foreigners occupied.

Of all those who come to the country the natives have learned that the missionaries are the only foreigners who do not come seeking concessions of one kind or another from their country and for this reason they repose more confidence in them. Further than that the missionaries are about the only people who learn the language thoroughly enough to get into sufficiently intimate contact with the people to really know what is in their minds. For these reasons the natives come to the missionaries with their troubles and ask for advice and assistance. Owing to the political situation in the country this puts the missionaries in a somewhat delicate position. To avoid difficulties they are forced to avoid anything that looks like interference in politics.

The presence of other white men in the country has never been an assistance to the missionaries in their work. It is impossible for those who have not lived there to realize the lowness of the moral standards of the eastern countries and there are few white men going there without their families or without other special restraint who can return with their moral spirits as clean as when they went there. The natives cannot help seeing the degradation of many of these westerners, and they cannot reconcile their conduct with the teachings of the missionaries. They are teachings of the missionaries. They are gradually learning, however, to distinguish between the good and bad in There is a feeling of unrest in the East, according to Mr. MacRae, caused by the aggression of westerners in the past. The people are beginning to ask why foreigners should be allowed such concessions as they have had in the past, and as the east wakens up more fully this may lead to startling developments in the future. developments in the future.
