

our eagerness to get all of it, but a more fortunate time is now ahead and we shall have the pleasure so long anticipated. We consider it a great honor that you included us among the friends to be specially remembered. In any event we would have secured the book at once. The very day after its arrival Jim sent a copy (somewhat after the manner of a convincing tract) to the President of one of the leading manufactories here. My reading of the preface and snatches here and there have been arresting, quite apart from my interest in the author, but it is

Dear C. Brother:-

We were elated to receive "Industry and Humanity" from its distinguished author and only our wish to read it together, sudden illness or death could have prevented an early acknowledgment. As I am still alive and able to faintly celebrate you see the first reason for my delay is the valid one. There has been such a rush of compelling business since the beginning of the year that we have only been able to glimpse your volume in spite of
