

MAYOR AMES WILL BE BOSS

Of Minneapolis for the Next Two Years.

Y. M. C. A. Sports Classed With Pug Prize Fights, and Neither Will be Tolerated

From Wednesday's Daily.

Minneapolis, Minn., Feb. 22.—Not a sparring contest, not a wrestling match, not a game of baseball, not a game of basketball even, not a game of football will be played in Minneapolis for the next two years. Mayor Albert Alonzo Ames has said it, and he means what he says. He stands ready to call out his entire police force to back up his order, and the Y. M. C. A. and other associations that were arranging to give athletic exhibitions in the near future have abandoned all their plans and called everything off until the present mayor shall have gone out of office.

Minneapolis is getting ready for the enforcement of every blue law on her statute books, and it is not improbable that an attempt will be made in the near future to stop the selling of Sunday newspapers on the street, to prohibit the opening of cigar stores on the Lord's day, to punish all merchants who venture to sell even so much as a necktie or a pair of suspenders on the Sabbath.

When Dr. Ames was chosen mayor of Minneapolis for the fourth time at the last election it was predicted and expected that he would give the city what has been termed a "wide open" administration. The doctor has always been a lover of sports of all kinds, and has always been in favor of giving the majority of the people what they want in the way of license. With this idea in mind, arrangements were made by several managers, soon after the election of the doctor, to inaugurate a carnival of boxing in this city.

Three weeks ago the first evening of fights was held, and had it not been for the fact that the main contest of the night was a rank hippodrome, all might have been well in the future. But talk was created, and with the talk came trouble, and now there will be no more sporting events in this city for a long time to come.

Boyd Frazier and others had arranged for a series of fights at the Exposition building here Monday evening, and no objection was made by the governor, who has long been a warm friend of Mayor Ames, until Sunday night, after a resolution had been adopted by the Sunday school workers of the state, calling upon him to stop the contests. The governor, although he had attended an entertainment in St. Paul a few evenings before, at which one of the features was a prizefight, took instant action, and politely ordered Mayor Ames to prevent the scheduled battles. Mayor Ames, after thinking matters over carefully, saw that he was, to use a slang expression, "up against the real thing," especially as the governor threatened to call out the state troops to stop the fights if the mayor declined to act. With the best grace at his command, Mayor Ames ordered that there be no meeting of pugilists Monday evening, and then proceeded to say a few things.

First of all, he paid his respects to the governor in the choicest language at his command—and Mayor Ames can be exceedingly fluent when he wants to be; then he issued an order to the police to stop any and all athletic events in which any participant can possibly receive an injury, and to carefully watch the Y. M. C. A. building, where it has been customary to hold glove contests, with the instructor of the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium as manager.

After all this had been done, the mayor broke loose and, in an interesting interview, outlined his plans for the remainder of his term—not a ballgame, not a wrestling match, not a glove contest, in fact, nothing whatever of an athletic nature is to be tolerated, and the entire police force is under positive orders to arrest all persons participating in any such events. The mayor announces that he will impartially enforce the laws, and that the rich as well as the poor will have to take their chances. He considers the interference of the governor part of a preconceived attack upon himself, and declares that he will fight to the end, and give the people of the city such an administration as they have never before had.

The Democratic Whip.
Olympia, March 4.—Gov. Rogers has vetoed the legislative reapportionment bill passed by the house and senate. He sent the bill, with a copy of the veto message, to the house and senate today. The message was read in the senate this morning and in the house this afternoon. Herewith is the veto message in full:

"State of Washington, Executive Department, Olympia, March 4, 1901.
"To the Honorable, the Senate of the State of Washington—Gentlemen: I herewith return, without my approval, senate bill No. 9, entitled 'An act to redistrict and reapportion the members of the senate and house of representatives of the state of Washington.'"

"An increase in membership of the state legislature, numbering 22, provided for in this bill, will largely add to the cost of governing the state and materially augment the difficulties incident to legislation. This increase in legislative membership is entirely disproportionate to our population and wealth, when compared with that of other states far exceeding ours in these particulars, and in my opinion is unnecessary and uncalled for by the people.

"An even more serious objection is the fact that the allotment of senators and representatives made is not in accordance with the population of the state, as required by the constitution, the apportionment made giving certain parts and portions of the state undue advantage and restricting others in the matter of legislative membership, thus vitiating at the very fountain head of law the equity of future legislation in the state of Washington. Respectfully submitted,

"JOHN R. ROGERS, Governor."

There is no doubt that Gov. Rogers was whipped into vetoing the measure by the Democrats of the house and senate. They have been at work on him ever since the bill passed both houses, but for a time received very little if any encouragement. Somewhat humiliated by the fact that the medical bill was passed in the face of his rather unusual veto message, the governor did not care to place himself in the same position. He told the Democrats that if they could show him that his veto would be sustained he would send the bill back with his disapproval. That the Democrats were unable to do so, as they knew that the Republicans were a unit on the thing and would in all probability give the governor a dose of political medicine similar to that administered in the case of the medical bill.

Nevertheless, the Democrats demanded that the bill be vetoed in order to place on it the Democratic stamp of disapproval. It is said that even such able Democrats as Chairman Henry Drum, of the Democratic state central committee, an intimate personal and political friend of Senator Turner, and Martin Maloney and other politicians high in the councils of the Democratic party, advised that the governor that it would be good politics to veto the reapportionment bill.

The governor remained obstinate. Saturday the Democrats decided to use the whip, and that they did it successfully is demonstrated by the result. The governor was notified that unless the bill was vetoed they would not support his board of audit and control bill introduced in the house by Merritt. This bill is one of the governor's pet hobbies. It reduces the present board from five to three members, puts them on salary and is supposed to take the board out of politics. When the threat to refuse to support the bill was made by the Democrats, Gov. Rogers bowed. He invited the Democrats of the house and senate to visit him at his home last night. They accepted. The meeting lasted until 10 o'clock. The Democrats reiterated the statement that unless a veto was forthcoming there would be no board of audit and control bill. The governor yielded and today's veto message was the result.

Board of Barber Examiners.

Olympia, March 4. Gov.—Rogers is already receiving numerous applications for appointment to the board of examiners provided for in the bill licensing barbers. As the governor is not acquainted with the qualifications of any of the applicants he has decided to leave the selection of three members of the board to the three barber's unions of Seattle, Spokane and Tacoma. One member will be appointed from each city, and the governor in each case, will follow the recommendation of the respective union.

The reason for selecting men from the cities is that as there are more barbers congregated in each of the larger places, a selection of the men having the best qualifications is likely to result, and for the further reason that the state would thus be divided into districts making it convenient for the barbers taking examination for license.

Rush to Nome.

That the rush to Nome this season will be as great as that of last year and of a much more substantial character is the opinion of Asa Gardner, one of the pioneers of Alaska, who returned yesterday from a trip to New York, where he visited his family during the winter. People in the state of New York, he says, are taking a lively interest in the far north and the Pacific coast. He met many who were preparing to come West prior to going to Nome. As in the past, Seattle will be their port of departure. Mr. Gardner will return to Nome by the earliest boat.

Mr. Gardner will be remembered as having stopped here as the representative of the Juneau Chamber of Commerce for four months in 1898. He went to Alaska in 1894, first to Sitka and points on the southeastern coast. In 1898 he continued on to Nome, being among the first miners to reach the district. He owns interests in two claims on Elkhorn creek, from which he took out $20,000 in dust, assaying $19 to the ounce, last summer. He came back to civilization late in the fall and spent the winter with his family in St. Lawrence county, New York, this being his first visit there in six years.

"Yes," he said, yesterday, "the rush to the Nome country will be on as large a scale this year as it was last, judging from the way people are talking about the matter back East. A totally different class of people will go up, however, and I look for a large amount of development work to be done. The people who are going to Nome this year have means. They are mostly business men who will do the district much good."

"The trouble with Nome last year was that the men who went north were not prepared for the privations of a mining camp, few of them had had experience in the life or had the necessary means. The result was that they left almost as soon as they reached the camp, and came back to rail against it. Those who will go up this spring are not that sort of people. The days of the rabble, so to speak, so far as Nome is concerned, are over, and now we are to have substantial progress."

"I was all through the central and northern part of New York state, and was asked many questions about not only Alaska but also the Pacific coast, Seattle in particular. The people of the east are alive to the fact that this city is the gateway to the north. Seattle could hardly be better known there, and many contemplate coming here soon. The entire coast is attracting great attention everywhere, but Seattle is the mecca of those going to Alaska."

"Southeastern Alaska, in my opinion, has a great future before it as a quartz mining country. I believe the whole Copper river district is a quartz proposition and that when it is developed it will be one of the leading mineral sections of the world. The district will be of material help to the upbuilding of Seattle for many years. At present it is only in its infancy."

"The Nome country, however, is the best place for the miner in Alaska, because it is easily the richest so far discovered, surpassing even the Klondike."

"I am going to Nome by the first steamer leaving Seattle, and will probably take a number of laborers along to work on the claims."—P.-I., March 5.

They Drink Blood.

"The fire eaters are dying out, but the blood drinkers are on the increase," says a New Orleans physician in The Times-Democrat of that city. "Go down to the slaughter pens near the barracks any morning, and you'll see a crowd of them waiting for their daily draft fresh from the animals' veins. Most of the drinkers are people who show plainly the ravages of tuberculosis, but others are merely run down and debilitated and take the blood as a tonic. There are always women and children in the gathering, and while all classes of society are represented, it is one place at least where there are no caste distinctions. Their afflictions and the curious treatment they are taking give them a common meeting ground, and it is singular to see how they fraternize. You will find wealthy business men chatting confidentially with hobo and society women swapping symptoms with women in ragged calico. It's a queer sight."
