

CHIGNECTO Post.

Deserve Success, and you shall Command it.

TERM: $1.00 In Advance.

Vol. II.

SACKVILLE, N. B., THURSDAY, JANUARY 4, 1872.

No. 34.

BUSINESS CARDS.

International Hotel.
(FORMERLY LAWRENCE.)
100 Prince William Street,
ST. JOHN, N. B.

THIS Hotel has, since it changed hands, been thoroughly renovated and furnished, at considerable expense. It is situated opposite the "Empress" Wharf, and within a few minutes' walk of the American Boats, and the Street Cars running to the Fredericton, and passing every five minutes. It commands a fine view of the Harbor, and the surrounding country. The Proprietor having had an extensive experience in Hotels and Steamers, feels confident that none who patronize him will be disappointed.

HARRISON & BURDIDGE, Barristers and Attorneys-at-Law, SOLICITORS, CONVEYANCERS, &c.
OFFICE—No. 4 Ritchie's Building,
Princess St., - - - ST. JOHN, N. B.

W. B. BERNARD & CO., Marble & Freestone Workers,
Point Du Chene,
WEST-MORLAND, N. B.

MONUMENTS, CRAVESTONES, Gravestones, Tablets & Counters, Tops, Sarcophagi and Brackets, made of the best materials, and executed in the most artistic manner. Designs may be seen at A. FORD'S, or on the premises. Estimates given on application.

A. FORD,
Agent,
July 5th, 1871, - - - Sackville, N. B.

George Nixon, Wholesale and Retail Dealer in PAPER HANGINGS,
Brushes and Window Glass, King St. - - - ST. JOHN, N. B. nos 21-1y

NEW ERA
IN Shoes, Shoe Nails, and TACKS.

The Goods Manufactured at G. R. FOSTER'S
Standard Nail, Shoe Nail and Tack Works, George's Street, St. John, N. B., are recommended by the Merchants and Traders of Canada, England and America, as being of the highest quality and GREATLY FINISH AND DURABILITY.
For Price Lists and Samples, please address the undersigned.

Orders submitted: prompt attention and satisfaction guaranteed.

Special attention given to the wants of the SHOE TRADE.

Nixon & Fawcett,
GENERAL DEALERS IN British, Canadian & W. I. Goods, FLOUR, MEAL & COUNTRY PRODUCE.
Sackville, - - - N. B.
H. R. FAWCETT.

Thos. R. Jones,
IMPORTER OF
British and Foreign Dry Goods, CLOTHING, HATS, CAPS, &c.
TO KING STREET,
St. John, N. B.

WARRIN & LOED, Confectioners,
AND
BISCUIT MANUFACTURERS, 40 DICK ST. & 61 KING STREET, ST. JOHN.

We desire to inform our friends and the public generally that we have on hand our large and varied assortment of Pure Confectionery!
at our usual low rates.
C. & L.

R. McELMON, Watchmaker, Jeweller, &c., AMHERST, N. S.

CONSTANTLY ON HAND—A nice assortment of Watches, Clocks and Jewelry. at our place for the Celebrated "WARRIN & LOED" WAFFLES, baking done with neatness and despatch.
Shop DIRECTLY OPPOSITE THE First Church.
may 13

BUSINESS CARDS.

E. McINTOSH,
Tin-Smith,
SACKVILLE, - - - N. B.

CONSTANTLY ON HAND, a quantity of Machine-made STOVEPIPE, TIN-WARE, COOKING, HALL, & PARLOR STOVES.

JOB WORK
promptly attended to. Having the latest improved machinery I am enabled to fill orders cheaply and at the shortest notice.
Oct. 11—oct 12 if.

Paints. Paints.
THOMPSON'S
White Lead, Zinc Paint, AND
PAINT MANUFACTORY,
69 PRINCESS ST. - ST. JOHN, N. B.
Wholesale Only.
oct 5

CARD.
Samuel Legere,
BUTCHER,
SACKVILLE, - - - N. B.

WOULD respectfully announce to the inhabitants of Sackville that he has opened a shop for supplying all kinds of FRESH MEAT, and hopes by strict attention to business to merit a share of public patronage.
oct 19—20

PIANOS,
CABINET ORGANS.
GRAND,
SQUARE & UPRIGHT
Pianofortes,
Cabinet Organs,
Agent for the Celebrated
WM. BOURNE & SONS' PIANOFORTES,
AND
The Smith American Organ, ACKNOWLEDGED
The Best in the World.
A large assortment on exhibition at 77 Prince William Street.
C. FLOOD, St. John, N. B. aug 31 - Agent for N. B.

"WEED"
SEWING MACHINES!
Manufactured by the
NORTH AMERICAN
SEWING MACHINE COMPANY
At St. John, N. B.
W. S. CALHOUN,
General Agent,
54 King Street.
St. John, - - - N. B.
aug 10—11

MAPLE & FREESTONE
WORKS,
DORCHESTER, N. B.
H. J. McGRATH.
EVERY DESCRIPTION OF Grave-Stone & Monumental Work Executed in the best style and at short notice.
Having improved facilities for executing the above work, I can furnish it cheaper than any other establishment in the Province and in the very latest styles.
apr 13

Besnard & Co.,
Real Estate and Money
BROKERS,
Princess Street, - - - ST. JOHN, N. B.

Farms and houses to let and for sale.
Bonds, mortgages and other securities bought and sold.
1y—sep 22

Albert J. Hickman,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
OFFICE LATELY OCCUPIED BY DR. ROBERTS,
Dorchester, N. B.

Literature.

MISS OR MRS.?
A Christmas Story, in Twelve Scenes.
BY WILKIE COLLINS.

PERSONS OF THE STORY.
Sir Joseph Graybrooke—Knight.
Richard Turlington—Of the Levant Trade.
Launcelot Linzie—Of the College of Surgeons.
James Dixon—Of the Roll of Attorneys.
Thomas Wildfang—Superannuated Secretary.
Miss Graybrooke—Sir Joseph's Sister.
Natalie—Sir Joseph's Daughter.
Lady Winwood—Sir Joseph's Niece.
Angela—Lady Winwood's Stepdaughter.
Dorothea—Lady Winwood's Daughter.
PERIOD: The Present Time. PLACE: England.

FIRST SCENE.
AT SEA.

The night had come to an end—The new-born day waited for its quickening light in the silence that is never known on land—the silence before sunrise, in a calm at sea.

Not a breath came from the dead air. Not a ripple stirred on the motionless water. Nothing changed but the softly glowing light; nothing moved but the lazy mist, curling up to meet the sun, its master, on the eastward sea. By fine traditions, the airy veil of morning thinned in substance as it rose—thinned, till there dawned through it the first rays of sunlight, the tall white rays of a schooner yacht.

From stem to stern silence possessed the vessel—as silence possessed the sea.

But one living creature was on deck—the man at the helm, dozing peaceably with his arm over the useless tiller. Minute by minute the light grew, and the heat grew with it; and still the helmsman slumbered, the heavy sails hung motionless, the quiet water lay sleeping against the vessel's sides. The whole orb of the sun was visible above the water-line when the first sound pierced its way through the morning silence. From far off over the shining white ocean the cry of a sculler reached the yacht on a sudden out of the last airy circles of the waning mist.

The sleeper at the helm woke, looked up at the idle sails, and yawned in sympathy with them; looked out at the sea on either side of him, and shook his head obstinately at the superior obstinacy of the calm.

"Blow, my little breeze!" said the man, whistling the sailor's invocation to the wind softly between his teeth. "Blow, my little breeze!"

"How's her head?" cried a bold and brassy voice, hailing the deck from the cabin staircase.

"Any where you like, master, all around the compass."

The voice was followed by the man. The owner of the yacht appeared on deck.

Behold Richard Turlington, Esq., of the great Levant firm of Pizzuti, Turlington, & Branca! Aged eight-and-thirty, standing stiffly and sturdily at a height of not more than five feet six, Mr. Turlington presented to the view of his fellow-creatures a face of the perpendicular order of human architecture. His forehead was a straight line, his upper lip was another, his chin was the straightest and the longest line of all. As he turned his swarthy countenance eastward and shaded his light-gray eyes from the sun, his knotty hand plainly revealed that he had earned his own living at one time or another in his life. Taken on the whole, this was a man whom it might be easy to respect, but whom it would be hard to love. Better company at the official desk than at the social table—Morally and physically—if the expression may be permitted—a man without a bend in him.

"A calm yesterday," grumbled Richard Turlington, looking with stubborn deliberation all around him. "And a calm to-day. Ha! next season I'll have the vessel fitted with engines. I hate this!"

"Think of the filthy coals and the infernal vibration, and leave your beautiful schooner as she is. We are out for a holiday. Let the wind and the sea take a holiday too."

Pronouncing these words of remonstrance, a slim, nimble, curly headed young gentleman joined Richard Turlington on deck, with his clothes under his arm, his towels in his hand, and nothing on him but the night-gown in which he had stepped out of his bed.

"Launcelot Linzie, you have been received on board my vessel in the capacity of medical attendant on Miss Natalie Graybrooke, at her father's request. Keep your place, if you please. When I want your advice, I'll ask for it." Answering in those terms, the elder man fixed his colorless gray eyes on the younger with an expression which added plainly: "There won't be room enough in this schooner much longer for me and you."

Launcelot Linzie had his reasons (apparently) for declining to let his host offend him, on any terms whatever.

"Thank you!" he rejoined, in a tone of satirical good humor. It isn't easy to keep my place on board your vessel. I can't help presuming to enjoy myself as if I was the owner.
The life is such a new one—to me! It's so delightfully easy, for instance, to wash yourself here. On shore it's a complicated question of jugs and basins and tubs; one is always in danger of breaking something or spoiling something. Here you have only to jump out of bed, to run up on deck, and to do this!"

He turned and scampered to the bow of the vessel. In one instant he was out of his night-gown, in another he was on the bulwark, in a third he was gambling luxuriously in sixty fathoms of salt water.

Turlington's eyes followed him with a reluctant, uneasy attention as he swam round the vessel, the only moving object in view. Turlington's mind, steady and slow in its operations, set him as a problem to be solved, on given conditions as follows:

"Launcelot Linzie is fifteen years younger than I am. Add to that, Launcelot Linzie is Natalie Graybrooke's cousin. Given those two advantages—Query: Has he taken Natalie's fancy?"

Turning that question slowly over and over in his mind, Richard Turlington seated himself in a corner at the stern of the vessel. He was still at work on the problem when the young surgeon returned to his cabin to put the finishing touches to his toilet. He had not reached the solution when the steward appeared an hour later and said, "Breakfast is ready, Sir."

There was a party of five round the cabin table.

First, Sir Joseph Graybrooke. Inheritor of a handsome fortune made by his father and his grandfather in trade. Mayor, twice-elected of a thriving provincial town. Officially privileged, while holding that dignity, to hand a silver trowel to a royal personage condescending to lay a first stone of a charitable edifice—Knights accordingly, in honor of the occasion. Worthy of the honor and worthy of the occasion. A type of his eminently respectable class.
Possessed of an amiable rosy face, and soft, silky white hair. Sound in his principles; tidy in his dress; blest with moderate politics and a good digestion—a harmless, healthy, spruce, speckless, weak-minded old man.

Secondly, Miss Lavinia Gray-brooke, Sir Joseph's maiden sister.
Personally Sir Joseph in petticoats.
If you knew one you knew the other.

Thirdly, Miss Natalie Graybrooke Sir Joseph's only child.

She had inherited the personal appearance and temperament of her mother—dead many years since—There had been a mixture of Negro blood and French blood in the late Lady Graybrooke's family, settled originally in Martinique. Natalie had her mother's warm, dusky color, her mother's superb black hair, and her mother's melting, lazy, lovely brown eyes. At fifteen years of age (dating from her last birthday), she possessed the development of the bosom and the limbs which in England, rarely attained before twenty.

Everything about the girl—except her little rosy ears—was on a grand Amazonian scale. Her shapely hand was long and large; her supple waist was the waist of a woman. The indolent grace of all her movements had its motive power in an almost masculine firmness of action, and profusion of physical resource. This remarkable bodily development was far from being accompanied by any corresponding development of character. Natalie's manner was the gentle, innocent manner of a young girl. She had her father's sweet tender ingrained on her mother's variable Southern nature. She moved like a goddess, and she laughed like a child. Signs of maturing too rapidly—of outgrowing her strength, as the phrase went—had made their appearance in Sir Joseph's daughter during the spring. The family doctor had suggested a sea voyage as a wise manner of employing the fine summer months. Richard Turlington's yacht was placed at her disposal—with Richard Turlington himself included as one of the fixtures of the vessel. With her father and her aunt to keep up round her the atmosphere of home—with cousin Launcelot (more commonly known as "Launce") to carry out, if necessary, the medical treatment prescribed by superior authority on shore—the lovely invalid embarked on her summer cruise, and sprang up into a new existence in the life-giving breezes of the sea. After two happy months of lazy coasting round the shores of England, all that remained of Natalie's illness was represented by a delicious languor in her eyes, and an utter inability to devote herself to anything which took the shape of a serious occupation. As she sat at the cabin breakfast-table that morning in her quietly made sailing dress of old-fashioned mauve—her inherited child-likeness of manner contrasting delightfully with the blooming maturity of her form—the man must have been truly armed indeed in the modern philosophy who could have denied that the first of a woman's rights is the right of being beautiful; and the foremost of a woman's merits, the merit of being young.

The other two persons present at the table were the two gentlemen who have already appeared on the deck of the yacht.

"Not a breath of wind stirring!" said Richard Turlington. "The weather has got a grudge against us.
We have drifted about four or five miles in the last eight-and-forty hours.
You will never take another cruise with me—you must be loth to get on shore."

He addressed himself to Natalie, plainly eager to make himself agreeable to the young lady, and plainly unsuccessful in producing any impression on her. She made a civil answer; and looked at her tea-cup.
Instead of looking at Richard Turlington.

"You might fancy yourself on shore at this moment," said Launce.

"The vessel is as steady as a house and the swing-table we are eating our breakfast on is as even as our dining-room table at home."

He too, addressed himself to Natalie, but without betraying the anxiety to please her which had been shown by the other. For all that, he diverted the girl's attention from her tea-cup; and his idea instantly awakened a responsive idea in Natalie's mind.

"It will be so strange on shore," she said, "to find myself in a room that never turns on one side, and to sit at a table that never tilts down to my knees at one time, or rises up to my chin at another. How I shall miss the wash of the water on my ear, and the ring of the bell on deck, when I am awake at night on land! No interest there in how the wind blows, or how the sails are set. No asking your way of the sun, when you are lost, with a little brass instrument and a morsel of pencil and paper.

No delightful wandering whenever the wind takes you, with the worry of planning beforehand where you are to go. Oh how I shall miss the dear, changeable inconstant sea! And how sorry I am I'm not a man and a sailor!"

This is the guest, admitted on board on sufferance; and not one word of it addressed, even by chance, to the owner of the yacht.

Richard Turlington's heavy eyebrows contracted with an unmistakable expression of pain.

"It is this cold weather holds," he went on addressing himself to Sir Joseph. "I am afraid, Graybrooke, I shall not be able to bring you back to the port we sailed from by the end of the week."

"Whenever you like, Richard," answered the old gentleman, resignedly.
"Any time will do for me."

"Any time within reasonable limits," Joseph, said Miss Lavinia, evidently feeling that her brother was conceit-ed to much. She spoke with Sir Joseph's amiable smile and Sir Joseph's softly pitched voice. Two twin babies could hardly have been more like one another.

While these few words were being exchanged among the elders, a private communication was in course of progress between the two young people under the cabin table. Natalie's sharply slipped foot felt its way cautiously inch by inch over the carpet till it touched Launce's foot.
Launce, devouring his breakfast, instantly looked up from his plate, and then, at a second touch from Natalie, looked down again in a violent hurry. After passing to make sure that she was not noticed, Natalie took up her knife. Under a perfectly acted pretence of toying with it absently, in the character of a young lady absorbed in thought, she began dividing a morsel of ham left on the edge of her plate into six tiny pieces. Launce's eye looked in side-long expectation in the divided and subdivided ham. He was evidently waiting to see the collection of morsels put to some telegraphic use, previously determined on between his neighbour and himself.

In the mean while the talk proceeded among the other persons at the breakfast-table. Miss Lavinia addressed herself to Launce.

"Do you know, you careless boy, you gave me a fright this morning?
I was sleeping with my cabin window open, and I was awoken by an awful splash in the water. I called for the stewardess. I declare I thought somebody had fallen overboard!"

Sir Joseph looked up briskly; his sister had accidentally touched on an old association.

"Talking of falling overboard," he began, "reminds me of an extraordinary adventure."

There Launce broke in, making his apologies.

Mersey in a Liverpool pilot-boat.
I had hired the boat in company with a friend of mine, formerly notions in London society, under the nickname (derived from the peculiar brown color of his whiskers) of "Ma-hogony Dobs."

"The color of his whiskers," Joseph not the color of his whiskers."

"My dear Lavinia, you are thinking of 'Seagreen Shaw,' so called from the extraordinary livery he adopted for his servants in the year when he was sheriff."

"I beg your pardon, Lavinia." Richard Turlington's knotty fingers drummed impatiently on the table. He looked toward Natalie.
She was idly arranging her little morsels of ham in a pattern on her plate. Launcelot Linzie, still movelessly, was looking at the pattern.
Seeing what he saw now, Richard solved the problem which had puzzled him on deck. It was simply impossible that Natalie's fancy could be really taken by such an empty-headed fool at that.

To be Continued.

Fireproof Materials.
Mr. H. J. Ramsdell, in a Washington letter to the Chicago Commercial, giving an account of an interview with Mr. Mullett, the superintending architect of the Treasury Department, elicits some interesting opinions as to the lessons from Chicago, especially the following, relating to fireproof materials:

"From," said Mr. Mullett, "I mean cast iron, absurd as the statement may appear, will not resist as much heat as good sound oak timber of the same dimensions. Fire expands the iron and warps it, and it breaks very easily. Indeed, if oak timber should be treated by any of the processes of liquid silicate, it may be considered almost a fireproof material compared with cast iron. As for stones suitable for building purposes as I told you before, there are few that are fireproof, though some approximate the necessary conditions and, except in severe conflagrations, may be generally depended upon.
Granite, marble, and sandstone are not to be trusted, as they soon perish by exposure to the heat, as has been shown at thousand times. But I am strongly in favor of light silicate as a preparation for wood to be used for building purposes. My attention was directed to this material some years since, but I have not had an opportunity to investigate the subject fully. I believe, however, that it merits more attention than any other suggestion that has been made public and may yet prove one of the most practical solutions of the question of non-combustible construction that has yet been offered. Whether this or some other process for making wood non-combustible is the more desirable, I am not prepared to say.
I am, however, decidedly of the opinion that any process by which wood can be rendered non-inflammable at a reasonable cost would not only be an inestimable blessing to the public, but its use should be rendered imperative by law."

The Western Christian Advocate draws sharp contrasts in the few facts and figures herewith given in regard to the city of Chicago:
"John Kinzie built his cabin there in 1804. The Indians massacred the garrison of Fort Dearborn in 1812. In 1830 there were twelve houses scattered about the marshes; a short time hereafter the Methodist preacher with his horses and saddle bags appeared, and proclaimed the Gospel to the few hundreds gathered there. In 1870 the census takers found a population of 300,000, which the papers claim was 500,000 short of the truth. Oct. 1, 1871, the city of Buffalo had in store 635,860 bushels of grain; Montreal, 541, 219; St. Louis, 77,381; Milwaukee, 792,339; Toledo, 1,282,581; Chicago, 5,078,500."

The reports of the Postmaster General shows that in 1870, in London alone, ten million yards of string were used for tying up letters for the country, and seventeen thousand pounds of sealing wax for sealing the mail bags, which numbered in the aggregate seven hundred thousand. In the whole of England four tons of ink were used during the year for postmarking the letters.