

Synopsis of Canadian Northwest Land Regulations

Any person who is the sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. The applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or sub-agency for district. Entry by proxy may be made at any agency, on certain conditions, by father, brother, son, daughter, brother or sister of intending homesteader.

Duties: Six months' residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres solely owned and occupied by him or by his father, mother, son, daughter, brother or sister.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter section alongside his homestead, Price $3 per acre.

Duties: Must reside upon the homestead or pre-emption six months in each of six years from date of homestead entry (including the time required to earn homestead patent) and cultivate fifty acres extra.

A homesteader who has exhausted his homestead right and cannot obtain a pre-emption may enter for a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $2 per acre. Duties: Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate fifty acres and erect a house worth $300.

Something Original—that's the Cry of Every Buyer of Printing

If every print shop could or would work character into their product there wouldn't be such common place printing.

We'll be glad of an opportunity to prove to you that when your printing is placed with us, there will be character to it.

Our new type faces will do that alone, but there will be more than up-to-date type faces. There will be care taken in the arrangement of the type—good ink will be used—the proper paper for the work will be selected, and printed in the largest and most modern country printing office in the Maritime Provinces.

"WOMAN AND MOSES"

"Oh, that stupid Dempster woman, she went up to him at some party or other and said:—

"Will you tell Doreen that she hasn't been near me for six weeks?"

"Of course, Arthur, you know what he is, blurted out— Why, she was with you last Wednesday week," and the stupid old thing, instead of tumbling to it, replied:—

"That I'm sure she wasn't, for I've been at Harrogate for a fortnight; my stupid dog again." The old fool.

"Well, you know you can't expect all your friends to tell stories," said Avril with a touch of bitterness, as she thought of Trefusis.

"It's no good being cross," went on Doreen. "If you don't want to help me out any way, so, but it's no good scolding me," then, bursting into tears, she said:

"I want to be comforted, not blamed," and Avril's heart melted at once.

"I feel positive, Doreen, that there is only one way out of this, and that is to tell Ar—I mean Mr. Trefusis—the truth. He won't believe any fresh stories we make up, but if you assure him that you only did it out of mischief and thoughtlessness, he will, I know, forgive you. He may be angry for a time, but he will certainly forgive you."

"He will go to Captain Lancaster," rejoined Doreen. "and I know he won't help me out for me wants me to be divorced and marry him."

"Nonsense," said Avril, for, young as she was, she felt quite certain that no penniless man like Captain Lancaster would want to marry an equally impetuous woman like Doreen. She had yet to learn that to the depths of human villainy there is no bottom.

"Well, you'll see."

"I can't believe a man would be so vile," said Avril. "Anyhow, we must do something before we're too late; where is your husband?"

"Heaven knows, he left in a fearful passion, saying he was going to some lawyer or other, I don't remember his name, but I know he's a man who always gets a divorce for the person who pays him best, so I shan't stand a chance. Fancy me in the Divorce court, doesn't it seem horrible to think of?"

At that moment, Mouche came in from her early walk with her nurse, looking like an ambulating lily in her white clothes, and threw herself first into Avril's and then into Doreen's arms. The two women's eyes met, surely for the sake of this bundle of innocence something must be done. Doreen kissed her two or three times passionately.

"You've ruffled my collar," said Mouche.

"Run away, darling," whispered Avril, "mother is worried." And the child, looking at her mother scrutinizingly, marched to the door.

"Promise me, promise me, Avril," said Doreen, with a touch of passionate feverishness, "that if the worst happens," here her voice broke "you'll never desert the child." She began to cry, and Avril held out her hand.

"Of course I promise," she said. "but we must not let the worst happen. I must go and try and find your husband."

"How good you are!" said Doreen. "Do you think he will listen to you, he is so angry?"

"Of course he's angry," rejoined Avril, the face of Arthur Trefusis, humiliated and scornful, came to her mind; "naturally he's angry, I can't think how you can be so stupid. But somehow, I feel sure he has not gone to a lawyer yet, and if I could only see him I might persuade him to forgive you."

"He is very fond of you, I know," said Doreen, with a touch of jealousy. Avril felt her cheeks grow crimson, and then white again, at Doreen's words.

"What nonsense you talk," she said, but Doreen was one of those who would talk of the scaffold.

"I shouldn't mind if he divorced me, if he married you," she went on recklessly. "I shouldn't mind a bit, for I know you would be good to Mouche."

"Oh, do be quiet!" said Avril, crossly. "Tell me where he is generally at this time and I'll go and find him."

"He generally goes to the Carlton till twelve," said Doreen, taking out her watch, "and it isn't eleven yet."

"Then I'll be off," Avril kissed her, somewhat coldly perhaps. She could not understand the character of a woman who could thus jeopardise her life, while married to such a man as Trefusis.

As she started for the Carlton Club in a hansom, the thought flashed across her:

"Why should I always be patching up quarrels between Arthur and Doreen, when the one doesn't deserve it and the other would be much happier without her?"

At the Carlton she sent up her name, and begged Mr. Trefusis to come out and speak to her. There was very little trace of anger on his face as he came down the steps of the club, and Avril thought how handsome he looked. She had not grasped yet that it was his utter indifference to Doreen that prevented any real traces of grief or impression of anger. As he leaned against her cab, she realized how thoroughly happy she would be with him and also make

It Needs No Painting

THOSE neat sparkling roofs with their crushed mineral shining in the sun—you see them all over the country—they are Amattite roofs.

The fact that Amattite needs no painting means a great saving to those who use it.

It is also a great convenience not to have to paint roofs.

Many builders have adopted the policy of using nothing but Amattite owing to this economy and satisfaction.

A booklet about Amattite will be sent free on request. Address our nearest office.

"You wouldn't behave like that if you cared," he said, and his words sounded almost like an inquiry.

"I don't know what I should do if I—I mean—if I was treated as you treat Doreen."

"It is so difficult to pretend," he said, "everything she says or does irritates me. Why can't she devote herself to her child and behave with common decorum?"

"She is so pretty," said Avril, "and people flatter her. I know there is no harm in her."

"Do you know, I don't admire her a bit!" said Arthur.

"Poor Doreen!" sighed Avril. Then they talked long and earnestly, and Avril pleaded her cause well, but she could not move him.

"No, Miss Chichester, it is very good of you, but I can't possibly change my decision. I am going to my solicitor this afternoon."

"Oh, I beg of you don't, don't ruin her life and Mouche's. Besides, you are not sure—"

"That will be the lawyer's business to find out."

"Please, please, Mr. Trefusis, wait and think a little. Supposing there is no harm after all, what a cruel, cruel act it would be."

"It's her own fault," he said doggedly. "If a woman will act like a— she broke off his words, and stopping still beneath the trees, turned to her, who had also stopped."

"You are very fond of her," he said.

For one instant she could have cried out, "No, I don't care for her, I despise her, it is for you I care, you in the city," but in real life these things, if thought, are not said, and Avril was incapable of disloyalty to her sex.

"I think Doreen has suffered too," she said softly. "You don't care for her, I can imagine nothing more terrible for a woman than to care for a man whom she knows does not care for her."

"Perhaps something in her tone struck him. He looked at her for an instant without replying, and his look again, and I know she has only been made her think. A sudden thought came to his mind for the first time.

"Don't put it like that. Forgive me, but I do put it like that. Forgive me this time. I will never ask you again, and I know she has only been foolish."

"It will be a perfect farce, for if I live under the same roof, I will never speak to her again."

Avril clutched at the avoidance of a scandal, rather than at a reconciliation, and she was probably wise.

"Well, that is better than disagreeing her." In her heart, she knew that he was too kind-hearted not to forgive if only he would give up the idea of divorcing her. If she could only make him promise not to do that.

She was beginning now to forget that what she pleaded for was the end of all possibility of happiness to herself. It was Arthur himself who forced this thought upon her.

"Why, why do you ask me this?" he said. "Why are you so anxious for me to keep a millstone round my neck, that hampers and trammels me at every step? Do you believe that when love and respect and regard have ceased we are still intended to go on with the comedy, to pretend and lie, and chafe and irritate each other and grow to loathe one another to the end of the chapter, because once, years ago, one muttered some words at the altar?"

"It seems difficult to understand, but if it were not so, there would be end of all solemnity of the marriage tie, I suppose," said Avril, fighting against her thoughts as she spoke.

"The Holy Sacrament of marriage, I suppose," laughed Trefusis, with a touch of cynicism that savoured of disbelief. "What rot it is two people tied to each other like a cat and dog, fastened by the same leash, 'Till death us do part.' Jolly look-out, isn't it?"

There was so much bitterness in his tones, that Avril felt she had been cruel to ask him to forgive Doreen.
