

ADVERTISER BOOK RECALLS MEMORIES TO OLD RESIDENT

Thomas Martindale Enjoys Recent Publication.

TELLS OF PAST YEARS London and Its Men of Affairs "Bound To Do Good."

To the Editor of The Advertiser: I have enjoyed reading the book, "London and Its Men of Affairs," very much. The reading of it could not help bringing back memories of those that are dead as well as those that are still on deck.

For instance—take William Bowman when I was thirteen years of age I went to a Methodist Sunday school which he was superintendent. I then had a good voice, and I was easily the leading singer in the school.

Year after year, I would go back to London to see my mother and father and other members of the family. I always took care to see William Bowman before my return.

I had been invited to address the board of trade of London. The date was some time ahead, so that when I arrived from Philadelphia I might have a full house and earnest listeners.

I arrived in London at about 11 o'clock in the forenoon, and fortunately for me it was once made my way to the president of the board of trade to advise him that I had arrived, and would be at the hall where the meeting was to be held at such time as he would designate.

In answer to my query as to why he was so uncertain of my reception on the part of the board of trade, he said that the members seemed to think that I was going to talk politics, and not to give them the benefit of my experience as a businessman in the third largest city on the continent.

My line of talk was of such character as to make the men think and think hard, when I described some of their business methods which were away behind the times.

I never heard him speak better, or more forcefully than he did on that occasion. When he had finished, a tall man whom I had never met before, arose and seconded the vote of thanks, and he did well, until he said that anyone could see that the speaker of the evening was a Liberal, as none but a Liberal could make such a speech—those bedlam, on a small scale, broke loose, and for some time things looked blue, but someone got him quieted, and in due time we all came out in good humor.

AUTO DEVELOPMENT GOOD AT ANY AGE, DECLARES DR. BELL

Telephone Inventor Praises Montessori System.

USEFUL IN UNIVERSITIES Writes Interesting Article for Educational Magazine, With Suggestions.

Educators and parents in London and other cities in the district who have become interested in the Montessori method of teaching will be attracted by the following extracts from an article by Dr. Alexander Graham Bell in the educational magazine, "Freedom for Stimulating the Child."

Materials should be provided so that from the observation of concrete facts children can make the desired generalization of the material; the child from the material to the generalization.

After observing these important concrete facts no child should be stimulated to remember them, that he can compare them and note their likenesses and differences. By the comparison of recollections he arrives at generalization of greater magnitude and importance than he can obtain merely by direct observation.

Stimulating the Reasoning Faculties. The child should organize his knowledge, making his own arrangements and thereby exercising his reasoning powers. The encouragement of collections of objects which the child finds in his environment is an important means of exercising the faculties of observation, memory and reflection.

In the process of auto-development of the child the teacher should develop experiments from which the child may spontaneously make the desired generalization. The child begins to ask questions about new observations, and he should be encouraged to answer these for himself.
