STRONG AS ITS WEAKEST LINK.

NIAGARA POWER is only as strong as its weakest link. Its weakest link is the stubborn audacity of Sir Adam Beck in maintaining that the system does not need protection by means of a reserve supply.

When the first estimates of the system were submitted, the Government engineers, without exception, included steam reserves, but Sir Adam Beck, recognizing that the cost would be increased, refused to give the people the necessary auxiliaries, and covered up the need for a secondary system, so got on quite well without that the Niagara system today is an undependable system with the germs of disaster in its inadequacy-disaster for a great enterprise into which the
