-The famous Irish home rule bill of Mr. Gladstone has at last passed a second read-spring and summer trade. ing in the House of Commons on a straight party vote. On the second reading of a bill the general principle involved is alone consucceed, the details being dealt with when the measure comes before the committee of the whole house. Strong objections have already been made to some of the details of this bill, and whiles these are modified it would are sidered, the details being dealt with when the and unless these are modified it would seem to be almost impossible to carry on the affairs of the nation, with our present known methods of parliamentary government, under the state of affairs it would create. In his former home rule measure Mr. Gladstone proposed to exclude entirely the Irish members from the English parliament. This step, Indian. however, it was urged, would partake 100 much of the nature of a separation of the two countries, and would be likely to lead two votes, has since been killed in committee. So the ladies will have to wait another year at least before being admitted to the privi-lege of voting for candidates for the local legislature. The valiant member for Queens, who was leading the fight for female suffrage, has certainly managed his case very badly. As we understand it, when his bill passed the second reading, which is the crucial two votes, has since been killed in committee.

the second reading, which is the crucial' point, it was a broad measuring, giving the same franchise to females possessing certain property qualifications as is now enjoyed by males. When the bill came to be dealt with n committee of the whole house, where the details of the various bills are considered, he moved to restrict the privilege of voting he moved to restrict the privilege of voting at local elections to "unmarried females" possessing the necessary property qualifica-tion. This proposition was promptly voted down, and then on motion of the attorney-general the various clauses of the bill were struck out, one by one, leaving nothing but the new left tent to which Mr. Hemeon's amendment went, made his bill hardly worth passing. Why in the world should an unmarried female be given a vote and the privilege denied her married sister? Because it may be affirmed, she pays taxes, if she possesses property. This was the argument which seems to have prevailed when widows and unmarried females were given the right to vote at municipal elections. But this arguvote at municipal elections. But this argu-

Let the wives and mothers have the same privilege as their unmarried sister. - A certain woman, mentioned in scrip-ture, once upon a time secured a favorable verdict from the unjust judge on account of her great importanity. One of the Ameri-can counsel, now appearing before the Behr-ing Sea Tribunal of Arbitration in Paris, appears to be trying the same tactics with the arbitrators.
