

exclamations knew no bounds. It could not but do one's heart good to see their faces shine as they did with delight. After we had had tea and cake together, they bade us good-bye. We could not but feel it had been a privilege, indeed, to be able to give them a little pleasure. I trust it may also prove a little encouragement to them in their new life. To us they seem to have so few bright spots in their own home life to look back at. The grandmother was baptized while we were away for our vacation. It was good to see them at Church last Sunday, our first Sunday since we returned.

I am considering the advisability of having a regular meeting at this old lady's house. It is far from the church, and I know the people around there never go to the church. It is not a very inviting place to sit in for two hours, to say the least about it, still I feel sure it would do her heart good to be able to do that much toward helping others to the opportunity of hearing about Jesus and His love.

INDIAN WORK.

From Miss S. Hart.

PORT SIMPSON, B.C.,

Sept. 29th, 1890.

The parcel sent by the Dundas Mission Circle to the Crosby Home arrived, and I wish to thank the ladies for their kindness. Anything in the line of bedding is so acceptable, and these are such substantial ones. I cannot tell you how much they are appreciated. Now that winter is coming on, thicker clothes have to be seen to, and when they come ready-made it is such a help. At the same time as your parcel came, another of clothing arrived. I do not know the donor, as no name was sent with it, but, whoever it was, understood what would be useful—yarn and stockings ready-knitted. I was afraid we were going to be a little short of yarn this winter, but I think now this will put us through. We have to get all our yarn from the East, and like home-spun the best.

The people have nearly all come home from their summer occupations—fishing at the different canneries. The salmon
