There is not a thought that is not striking a blow; there is not on impulse that is not doing mason-work; there is not a pression thrust this way or that, that is not a workman's thrust.. The imagination in all directions is building. You think that you are throwing out the net for game; you think that you are laying plans for your accomplishment; but behind all the conscious work that is going on in you, behind your visible attainments, there is another work going on. There are as many master-workmen in you as there are separate faculties; and there are as many blows being struck as there are separate acts of emotion or volition. And this work is going on perpetually. Every single day these myriad forces are building, building, building. Here is a great structure going up, point by point, story by story, although you are not conscious of it. It is a building of character. It is a building that must stand, and the word of inspiration warns you to take heed how you build it, to see to it that you have a foundation that shall endure; to make sure that you are building on it, not for the hour in which you live, but for that hour of revelation, when you shall be seen just as you are.
