This work aims at being of practical utility to medical men whenever difficulty arises in deciding the precise cause of any particular symptom of which a patient may complain. It covers the whole ground of Medicine, Surgery, Gynecology, Ophthalmology, Dermatology, and Neurology.

The volume deals with diagnosis from a standpoint which is unique. It is an index in that its articles on the various symptoms are arranged in alphabetical order; at the same time it is a work upon differential diagnosis in that it discusses the methods of distinguishing between the various diseases in which each individual symptom may be observed. Whilst the body of the book thus deals with symptoms, the general index, containing some 50,000 references, gathers these together under the various diseases in which they occur.

"May be said to represent the last word as to limits of diagnostic power at the present time. The illustrations are of a uniformly high merit, and are materially aided by French's work, both as editor and contributor, we cannot speak too highly of. This remarkable index."—Brit. Med. Jour.

"Will be a very potent help in trouble. We predict for it an assured and immediate success."—Hosp.

"A valuable addition to the armamentarium of the physician, and both the editor and his colleagues deserve hearty praise for the successful accomplishment of this exhaustive undertaking."—Johns Hopkins Hospital Bulletin.

"The editor is to be commended upon the care and pains with which he has carried out the general scheme, and upon the success which has attended his efforts to procure a thoroughly practical work of reference. We have secured a much-needed extension, and have done the author a uniformly helpful and practical thing. But we are a further addition to the practitioner's library, and a much-needed systematically as a work of reference, should materially help in the diagnosis of cases."—Lancet.

"No medical work for many years has been so well adapted to the use of the busy general practitioner."—New York Med. Record.

"A most needed work of speedy reference, and we can confidently recommend this work to the practitioner."—Brit. Med. Jour.

"Admitted to be possible, it is a work of great value in its value to the doctor outside the wards of a hospital will be of great service."—Lancet.
