

The capabilities of railways and their influence in stimulating and increasing population and business wherever constructed, are now so well understood that nothing need be added upon this head. There can be no doubt that the European and North American Railway Company will possess, when their present plans are perfected, a great and valuable property, and especially valuable to those who may be able and willing to become contributors to its capital stock, under the arrangement as proposed.

EDWIN F. JOHNSON.

MIDDLETOWN, Ct., November, 1864.