Green Ginger Dainties

Our grandmothers prepared a great many delicious pickles and preserves in which they used ginger root. They preserved ginger and they imported it preserved from China and the East Indies as is now imported, tho it was much more costly then than it now is.

Therefore they were compalled to use Therefore they were compelled to use apples and pears or any of the cheaper fruits, flavored with ginger, and these preserves were almost equal to the preserved root itself. When tomatoes came in use they were prepared with ginger in the same way and now make one of our best inexpensive preserves.

Pears with diager.

To prepare pears with ginger weigh out three pounds of firm, ripe pears, and in the title role the critical have been unanimous in saying that three pounds of firm, ripe pears, when no by one Divide them one one Divide the Divide them one Divide them o

Ginger Apples.

For ginger apples select firm, luscious apples and prepare them in the same way—tho it is not so necessary to clarify the syrup. A delicious preserve and one very similar to an East India preserve is made of the same yellow ground tomato prepared with ginger in, exactly the same way as pears. These tomatoes are simply freed from the stem and peeled by pouring boiling water over them, or the peel may be left on and the tomato merely pricked like plums. They are about the size of plums. Boil them in the ginger syrup till they are perfectly clear and transparent, but not until they break to pieces. Ripe, red tonectly clear and transparent, but not until they break to pieces. Ripe, red to-matoes are very nice cut in slices and preserved, pound for pound, with the addition of ginger and slices of lemon cut very thin.

Mrs. Wm. C. Alexander (nee Mc-Naught) will receive for the first time since her marriage on Friday afternoon and evening, Aug. 28, at 151 Bedford-road.

There are many sour pickles to which a little ginger root is an improvement. Do not confound this ginger root used to pickling and prescriptor with the Do not confound this ginger root used in pickling and preserving with the dry root used in spicing. The dry ginger root sold by druggists and some grocery stores is of no value in preserving. Neither can you get the same flavor from inclosing ground ginger in a bag and boiling it in syrup. Both these substitutes for the green root give a rank, coarse flavor to pickles and preserves. What is needed is the green ginger root, which is brought to our markets at this season. It is a thick green root, and when in good condition may be easily scraped free from its skin and cut in slices. When it is poor it is withered and full of black spots.

PETAWAWA WATER PURE.

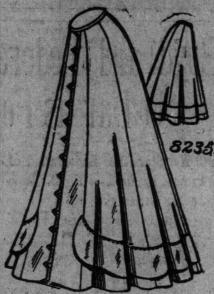

OTTAWA, Aug. 26.— (Special.)—Lt.—Col. Hurdman, who has just returned from Petawawa Camp, says that there is no danger of men in camp contracting typhoid fever, as the water supply is of the best.

"Whatever cases of typhoid fever have occurred at Petawawa are directly traceable to the water the men drank at Quebec," declared Col. Hurdman.

Ginger Beer.

Ginger beer is also an excellent summer beverage. It is easy to make, as it contains no materials except those found in the ordinary store closet or the druggists' shops. Boil 11 ounces of ginger root, ordinary ginger, tied a bag, for half an hour in a gallon of water with the yellow peel of two lemons. Then add eight gallons of pure water, 10 pounds of sugar, the juice of four lemons, half a pound of Bristol.

No play in recent years has so served for editorial comment and even judicial reference as has "The Thief," Charles Frohman's production of Henri Bernstein's great play which comes to the Princess on Monday evening for a week. In blazing this path Bernstein has told a story which for absorbing interest and subtle and ingenious development is unique in the history of the theatre. First produced at the Renaissance Theatre in Paris, "The Thief" had not been on the boards two months before translations were being made of it for the English, American, German, Russian, Spanish and Swediish stages. For the performances of "The Thief" at the Princess Charles Frohman has selected the following finely balanced cast: Charles Dalton, Herbert Kelcey, Effic Shannon, Eugene O'Brien, Arthur Lawrence, Cecil Owen and Edith Blair.
