A prison farm should be provided for these gentry, as well as for drunken husbands who are a burden upon their families, and who are a public disgrace on the streets of the city. It will always be provided to the community, the more sampled to the city of the cit the streets of the city. It will always be necessary to have a temporary shelter of some kind in a sea-port town, and in fact in any large city; but, unless it is supplemented by a system which will be a guarantee that only temporary relief is granted to any one individual, the community will always be burdened as at present. The question whether the temporary shelter should be provided by the civic authorities or by an institution like the Salvation Army has been settled for the present so far as St. John is con-

like the Salvation Army has been settled for the present so far as St. John is concerned, and the Metropole is to be rebuilt. Those who are laboring to this end will not have completed their work when they have placed at the disposal of the Army a certain amount of money. They must continue their labors until a done very valuable work in directing whole and whatever. They must continue their labors until a prison farm is established and whatever legislation may be necessary secured, so that the man who frequently returns to the shelter, and the ordinary drunkard, and the man who neglects to provide for his family, may be placed in an institution where work will be provided and the community relieved of their evil presence and example, and of the burden of supporting them.

done very valuable work in directing public attention to the advantages of the port of St. Andrews, and has also given that town an excellent weekly newspaper for quite a number of years.

Mr. Dugal is endeavoring to learn what the other members of the Flemming government know about the padded items and other irregularities which Mr. H. F. McLeod, M. P., said he had known about when he was a member of periodic epidemics of corruption charges."

Referring to the charges in connection with the Transcontinental Railway this correspondent adds:—

"The charges have admittedly fallen flat, as the government investigators have not been able to adduce much that is specific;" and he says further that "The Transcontinental inquiry was partisan from the heginning."

The Fredericton Gleaner attempts to pour ridicule upon the questions that are being asked in the legislature with a legitimate desire on the part of those who ask them to secure information that ought to be placed before the public. The more the Gleaner ridicules the effort, the more firmly the public will be convinced that a full and frank answer to the heginning."

Referring to the charges made by the the government's health. Referring to the charges made by the Liberals in connection with the government's own method of carrying on elections and by-elections, and their administration of public works, the Guardian's ley Railway. The St. John board of the leader in the tration of public works, the Guardian's correspondent says:—

"Money has been used and is being used by the present administration with a frankness that is unusual even in Canada, and on a gigantic scale." Continuing this writer says:—

"At the present moment on the eve of redistribution of ridings the minister of militia is scattering drill-sheds over the land, and when one examines the list of these projected buildings one finds that they are either quite unnecessary or that they are erected at twice the cost which is justifiable. On the other hand public works which are urgently needed in places that are secure Conservative strong-holds, or hopelessly Liberal strong-holds, cannot be pushed through. When so much lies on the surface, one is filled with dismay as one reflects upon the thousand hidden opportunities for corruption."

The Guardian's correspondent laments the public apathy and the listlessness with which the people regard the whole question of political corruption.

It is hardly to be expected that Conservative journals in Canada will publish these comments by an independent observer. That it is possible to print such statements at all, knowing them to be well founded, is a part of the price Canada pays for having a tory government in power.'

RELIGIOUS CO-OPERATION

The mass meeting in the Imperial Theatre yesterday was chiefly notable because people of different creeds met together to xpress their sympathy and sidies in the construction of the railway.

their desire to co-operate to promote a good cause. There is not nearly enough of such co-operation, but it may reasonably be hoped that the development of the brotherhood movement will result in more and more of such co-operation.

The construction of the ranway.

In Winnipeg, Man., the wind blew so furiously as to tear a freight car from its fastenings and send it along the track at the rate of sixty miles an hour. The car trayeled wild for many miles and finally crashed into a passenger train with such force as to be thrown com-

$22,000 for the benefit of the invalid son of the late Charles Tellier, the inventor of the cold storage process now in use all over the world, who died of starvation last October at the age of eighty-five. The father's greatest concern was as to the future of his son who is twenty-two years of age, but too delicate to work. The money just collected will assure his future comfort. Of the total sum $19,000 was subscribed in Argentina and $2,000 in Uruguay.

France has decided to strike a medal commemorative of the great invention of the young man's father.

France gave the father the decoration of the Legion of Honor. All his effects were in pawn and yet this man whose inventions brought the exports of France up to two billion francs, died literally of starvation and when he was dead the government slipped a 1,000 franc note between his fingers. He was accorded a great funeral and now a medal is to be struck in his honor.

In the cold storage process now in use has been for seventeen years. Miss Farlow and Miss Gray lived together at the Pepperday Inn in Searsdale.

It is believed that the girl went to Chicago, but this did not become known until Miss Farlow had left for that city.

Before leaving she sent to the chief of police in Chicago the following telegram: "Florence Gray, heiress to $1,000,000 estate; eighteen years old, medium size, dark hair and eyes. Mailing photograph. Believe she is in your city."
