LATE GOSSIP FROM LONDON

Society Women Bound to Bar Uninvited Guests -- Queen Sets Style--Merits of British Soldiers Discussed.

London, Nov. 21.—No meeting of European sovereigns is complete without a hunting expedition, and the deer drive which the German emperor arranged last week for the benefit of the czar of Russia was of truly regal dimensions. It took place for the first time in the Kaiser's new preserves at Oranienburg, some thirty miles out of Berlin.

The deer—red deer, fallow deer and roebucks—had so increased in numbers since their removal from the Grunewald forest five years ago that there were over 5000, a third part of which were put at the disposal of the imperial guns. For miles round the tract was guarded by troops, and no ordinary mortal was permitted to gain a glimpse of the proceedings.

Nearly 500 deer fell to the guns of the party at the big drive, the czar shooting nineteen and the Kaiser fifty. One superior twenty-two pointer brought down by the czar so delighted him that his host has given orders for the antlers to be preserved and forwarded to Russia.

The exchange of many costly gifts between the two imperial families. The Russian monarch brought for the Kaiserin as a present from the czarina some fine sapphires set in a pendant, and for the Kaiser's daughters three priceless pearls. The Kaiser presented his guests with some of the most beautiful specimens of Berlin royal porcelain, which his factories have ever produced, while for the little czarvitch he ordered a miniature automobile, a switchback railway and a merry-go-round.

The German monarch, who has always been a great admirer of Nicholas II's beautiful consort, who was, before her marriage, Princess Alix of Hesse, and the Kaiserin has never concealed a somewhat unreasonable jealousy of the czarina, both before and after her marriage. The two ladies never visit each other, and though the Kaiser is generally master of Germany, and his household, even he seems to be afraid of certain lectures, and this fact is believed to have accounted for the delay in the meeting between the two monarchs.

It is to be an obstacle in the way of a return visit by the Kaiser to the czar.

How to keep the unbidden guest away is a problem which London hostesses have been obliged to solve in a drastic manner. The other day, in a note printed in the fashionable news columns of a London paper, a well-known hostess requested all her guests invited to dine at a West End hotel to bring their cards of invitation. This request, new to London society brought sympathetic appreciation from other society women, who declare that the evil of uninvited guests crowding in at fashionable functions has grown to an intolerable extent.

One who recently gave a dance at a West End hotel for 250 guests found the rooms crowded with 400 people, all of whom pretended to have received invitations. It is impossible to separate the sheep from the goats in such a crush, and the hostess in annoyance had to pay a bill 60 per cent. heavier than she had given in.

Some of these intruders are now pretty well known by their faces. Most hostesses have seen them repeatedly, but nobody seems to know exactly who they are. With a respectable front they are said to have attended, uninvited, practically every social function that held out a prospect of a good time. But their day is over, if "no card" means the production of invitation card, becomes a standing order.

However, little Queen Mary's opinion may affect fashions for adults, for what of dressing her children is being copied all over England. She believes in the plain and useful sailor costume and all young ladies from 3 to 12 years of age in the kingdom are being dressed in this fashion.

The boom in sailor suits throughout England has been astonishing. In London 50 per cent. more perquisites are being sold than a year ago.

The princes wear sailor blouses of dark blue serge, short trousers and leggings, with reefer coats and cadet caps or sailor caps. Princess Mary wears a full dark blue serge blouse with white collar and short pleated skirt, reefer coat and sailor hat. Before long it will be exceptional to find an English child without at least one of these costumes in his or her wardrobe.

Within a few weeks the British Parliament will be asked to pass the naval prize bill, a measure which will have a far-reaching effect. It is the legislative outcome of the declaration of London, signed by the governments of the naval powers, including the United States, in February of last year, the object of the powers being to settle certain vexed questions of international law in naval war.

Some months ago a special committee composed of representatives of English mercantile, shipping and insurance interests was appointed by the London chamber of commerce to discuss the declaration of London, which, though signed, has not yet been ratified. The committee's report which was issued the other day is distinctly condemnatory.

The most important article in the declaration of London deals with "conditional contraband" which includes all foodstuffs. Such contraband is liable to confiscation. This clause, according to the committee, jeopardizes the supply of foodstuffs in war and the effect would be famine or famine prices, as neutral carriers would be unwilling to run the risk of conveying food to Great Britain. Shipments to neutral continental ports, on the other hand would involve no risk at all. The report adds:

"The irony of this danger to Great Britain is enhanced by the fact that such neutral continental ports may actually be supply ports relied on by the enemy, and that the enemy would even be permitted through such ports to import food for his armed forces openly and exempt from capture."

The committee therefore considers that the declaration of London appears to have been framed without sufficient regard to the fundamental difference between the situation of Great Britain and neutral powers.

The high seas and the air are now import most of its food supplies by sea, and that of continental countries which are connected with various neutral ports and which are largely self-sufficient in their foodstuffs.

After discussing the question of the destruction of neutral prizes and of the conversion of merchant vessels into combatant destroyers, the committee gives the following reasons for opposing the ratification of the declaration of London:

(a) That the effect of the declaration is to allow the law of nations as hitherto maintained in a manner entirely unprejudiced and to expose to capture or deliberate destruction food supplies borne to any part of Great Britain.

(b) That the absence of any provision in the declaration for preventing the conversion of merchant vessels into combatant destroyers is a grave reason for opposing the declaration or to proceed with the naval prize bill.

(c) That the admission of the principle of destruction of neutral prizes would be in the highest degree prejudicial to the interests of this country.

The Lycium Club, of Berlin, which like its prototype in London, is a club for women only, has held a meeting to discuss the establishment of a movement in Berlin is Signorina Cecilia Meyerini, of Rome. This lady lectured to her German sisters on the prompt success of the Italian movement in the cause of popular courtesy, and told them that there is nowhere in the world so crying a need for a similar institution as in the German empire.

As a matter of fact, no topic is more common among foreigners in Berlin than the boorish manners of its inhabitants. No unaccompanied woman is safe there from molestation in public places. A recent issue of a local Anglo-American paper contained a letter from an angry American de-

Ric and Poor to Aid 50,000 Strikers

One of the 50,000 strikers who sold 62,000 newspapers in one day for their Relief Fund.

Chicago, Dec. 1.—All classes and kinds of people are flocking to the aid of the striking workers of ready-made clothes sold both at wholesale and by mail order to the entire country.

Poorly fed, poorly fed, the strikers are in winter weather, and are bravely, they willingly suffer now for the lack of going back later with their demands granted.

All Chicago, from society to the slums, from the saloons, is helping them, and the rest of the country is expected to follow the good example by adding in money to buy bread and coal for 2000 needy families and for 5000 hungry babies.

Physical dentists, barbers and service men have offered the strikers free services. Actors give benefit performances. Teachers, moving picture shows, dry stores and other business men give their profits on certain days. Teachers feed and clothe the hungry, and the school children, who have no money, are given where ever men and women gather—in workshops as well as women's clubs. The exclusive "No Vote Tax" league, college students, teachers, ministers, have all helped.

Unions send donations by the thousands. Business men of prominence have appealed to the police to treat strikers gently.

Mrs. Frances Quire Potter, one of the nation's leading suffragists, and Miss Katherine Toman, the Wellesley historian, call west to help the strikers. Hotels have universally refused to house strike-breakers, and the manufacturers have had to lodge their own workers.

Despite the hearty support in these many ways those in charge at the women's trade union league headquarters, 275 LaSalle street, say there now stand united in a demand that their union be recognized.

scribing how on a score of occasions his wife had been persecuted and insulted by German men, the moment she was left alone by her husband.

In many other forms this want of manners impresses itself on the stranger in Berlin. Shop assistants, street car and motor conductors, petty officials of all kinds are not the sole offenders. There is a want of ordinary civility on the part of the entire public.

FACULTY CONCERT AT ACADIA SEMINARY
 Wolfville, Nov. 30.—The annual Acadia Seminary Faculty Recital was held in the college assembly hall last night, where seven of the most accomplished teachers at the institution have ever had, delighted the large audience, with their educational entertainment.
