CARDINAL GIBBONS ON LITTLE THINGS.

In a recent sermon preached by Cardinal Gibbons with the text "He had done all things well," the extreme importance and absolute necessity of little things in the struggle for existence and for salvation were especially dwelt upon. The Cardinal, as usual was simple, clear, and his remarks were to the point.

"He had done all things well," said Cardinal Gibbons in commencing his sermon. "The multitude came to our dear Saviour and they praised Him, not because of the great exploits He had accomplished as the conqueror of men, but because He did all things well for the glory of His Father and the welfare of humanity, small as well as great."

"I propose to make a special plea in behalf of the small things of life. I hold that our sanctification here and our salvation hereafter are dependent upon the accomplishment of greater achievements, but rather upon the faithful, diligent performance of the commonplace daily duties of our life—our public and domestic duty, the manner in which we go about our daily vocations, the attitude we maintain in our social conversation one to another, and the way in which we conduct ourselves during the recreation which we are enjoying here in this beautiful world."

"I hold it as an axiom that we can sanctify all this work. It matters not so much whether we are a laborer or a clown on the stage of life; the great object is to fill faithfully the post to which God has assigned us. "How many a brave Britain and Boer sheds his blood and goes down to his grave in South Africa unworn, unblest, and unpraised. Yet he has done and did that accomplish the victories for which generals receive the praise. "When the traveller has approached Mount Lebanon, in Syria, and beheld in admiration in the distance those tall majestic cedars that crown that mount, he pays no attention to the trees that have grown around those trees. True, when he approaches the summit those grand trees afford, indeed, to him some shelter from the rays of the sun, but the little blades of grass become his guide and more important duty, because they give food and refreshment to the beast of burden. It is the little deed well done that adds much to the sum of human happiness."

"These little acts of Christian charity that we show to one another; those little kindly acts of politeness and respect, those little acts of politeness—those do more to cement together the bonds of social and family life than the most brilliant achievement ever accomplished. "We are too much given in this world to do honor to those who pride themselves on their great achievements, and who formed, while we neglect and forget those who accomplish meritorious though comparatively small deeds. But that was not the case with Christ, as was intimated with His words to His disciples concerning the man who contributed her mite to the temple. "People come to me and say, 'Cardinal, if I were a rich man or a rich woman I would give many presents and I would endow a university. I would found a hospital. I would make my name conspicuous by the great works I would accomplish.' "These remarks do not do any good. They do not boil the kettle. They are a waste of words. And I notice that those people who make these hypothetical proposals are not, as they think, the little they give, as they think they exempt themselves from contributing even a farthing according to their means."

The Cardinal told anecdotes of great men to illustrate the lesson he was on the point of teaching. He spoke of the diligence, patience and persistence of Michael Angelo, of the attention to details paid by Isaac Newton and of the pains bestowed upon his work by Lord Tennyson. The Cardinal closed his sermon with a few words of admonition. "Let me admonish you to begin each day as a rational Christian man by consecrating that day to God," he said: "Thus you will sanctify all the actions of the day."

ENGLISH CATHOLICISM.

The progress of the Catholic Church in England is a subject on which very divergent views prevail, earnest Catholic workers contending that while progress has undoubtedly been made in the conversion of England, ground has been lost through the taking down of the marriages and other causes which need not be enumerated. A religious census would go far to enable us with tolerable certainty to find out the actual Catholic population, but the persistent opposition of the Liberal party has prevented this being done, from their point of view the interests of the Nonconformists would suffer. The Bishop of Liverpool has just announced, in a sermon delivered in the Fyde district, some facts which go far to show the real progress of the Church in the diocese of Liverpool, which is the largest in England. In the year 1819 there were 77 priests in the county of Lancashire; to-day there are 600; the 70 small chapels have given place to 397 public churches, and the Catholic population of the diocese has increased to the extent of 600,000. More than 120,000 children are at this year attending the 290 Catholic schools of Lancashire, and what is more remarkable still, is the interesting fact that in Lancashire alone, at this moment, there are just half as many nuns as were in the whole of England at the time of the Reformation; a century ago there was not one in the country. The establishment of 80 convents since then is a very remarkable fact, in view of the tremendous opposition offered to Catholicism in that country up to recent date. These official figures have attracted a great amount of attention, and go to prove that the near approach of England's conversion is not a dream, but a rapidly approaching reality.
