

Golfing widows played too in Langdon Trophy tourney

There were no golfing widows Sunday at The Mississauga Golf and Country Club. Both husband and wife could be seen stroking their way towards the half-way house for refreshments and onwards to the back nine. But at no time was the tournament for the Langdon Trophy taken lightly.

The foursomes, led off by the Langdon's and followed up by couple after couple, played serious golf throughout the afternoon. There were, however, some unusual happenings.

The ladies all seemed to end up in the sand, having to accept their fate with a gusty breeze as they blasted to the pin. But they all did it exceptionally well and one wife was so good that her husband seemed to lose sight of his ball for just a second.

Some women pondered over their score cards while the men spent their time sinking forty-five footers, coaxing them in with the most exquisite of body English, ending in a triumphant "sock-it-to-'em" of gusto.

News Feature
by John Willis

