GALICIA BEARS UP WELL UNDER RUSSIAN RULE

Austrian Subjects Are Not Heart-Broken Over the Change of Masters.

MUSCOVITE IS KIND HEARTED.

Warns Captured Soldiers to Throw Away Explosive Bullets.

By Hamilton File.) With the Russian Forces, Tarnopol, Eastern Galicia.

We are in Austria here, but no one who was plumped down into Tarnopol, says that in an aeroplane, would ever guess it.

Not only are the streets full of Russian soldiers. All the names on the shop-fronts are in Russian characters.

The hotels have changed their styles and titles. The notices posted up in public places are Russian.

Everywhere Russian (of a kind) is talked, German, the official language of Austria, is neither heard or seen.

It is true that this part of Galicia has been in the possession of our ally since the early days of the war. Even so, it is a surprise to find a population so accommodating.

This Russification is not the result of an "iron heel" upon an occupied of an "iron heel" upon an occupied of an "iron heel" upon an occupied.

For Russians to practice such methods as Germany employs in dealing with localities held by military forces, the Russian character is far too kindly.

"What can you do," an infantry colonel asked me the other day, half-indignant, half-in pity, with men who are only too ready to be caught if they catch him, even if he has behaved abominably to them? Orders have been given that Austrians found with revolvers in their belts and cartridges shall be treated as offenders against the laws of war. Our fellows actually ask prisoners if they have such cartridges, and that is quick, there then away.

That is good illustration of the gentleness and unbounded human sympathy which are commonly found in Russia among all classes.

The colored people, that is, the Jews and Poles, who are the Ruthenians, whose speech is almost identical with that of the South-Western Russia. They are very like the "Little" Russians, so called to distinguish them from the people of "Great" Russia in the north.

They live in the same thatched and whitewashed cottages. They have the same gaily colored national costumes still in wear. The same fairy tales, the same nursery rhymes, the same folk songs, so different from the melancholy strains of northern folk-music.

Almost the same religion. The finest churches in Tarnopol belong to the Poles, who are Roman Catholics. The Russian soldiers, many of them, seem to find the Roman mass quite as comforting as their Orthodox rites.

They stand and listen to it humbly, crossing themselves in Eastern fashion, only caring to know that God is being worshipped in more or less the same fashion with that to which they are accustomed. But in the Ruthenian churches they find exactly the same ritual as their own.

With their blood-relations they are upon a friendly footing, an interesting exhibition in Petrograd last year illustrating the Russian racial traits in the Ruthenian population.

Down here one recognizes these at once, a clearer proof could be found of the gentle, kindly character of the Russians than the attitude towards them of the Austrian Slavs generally.

At a point close to the firing line early this morning I saw three Austrian prisoners who had been "captured" during the night. They had, in point of fact, given themselves up. They were Serbs from Bosnia, and they were quite happy to be in Russian hands. I saw them again later in the day on their way to the rear, sitting by the roadside smoking cigarettes which their escort had given them. Captives and guardians were on the friendliest of terms.
