My Business.

It is everybody's business. In this old world of ours, To root up all the weeds he finds, And cultivate the flowers.
It is everybody's business. As he walks earth's weary miles, To keep back all the trowels he can, And bring out all the smiles.
It is everybody's business. I'm sure you've always heard, To hold in check the harsh one and To speak the kindly word.
It is everybody's business. It is our old world's need— To keep the head from sinking out, And do the loving deed.
And stand 'in everybody's work To be that link and true To the link and true.

A Tragic Dilemma.

Billy Haveland swung down the gravelled pathway, whistling blithely. His cup of happiness was full to overflowing, for he was not about to see his lady love after an absence of two long—sternally long—weeks? Turning down one of the sidewalks, he came upon Dennis, the gardener, busily engaged in training a refractory rosebush up against the garden wall. A few well-placed compliments on the beauty of the flowers and a wondering admiration as to how he kept the garden in such a riot of bloom, served to put Dennis in a sufficiently good humor to allow Billy the privilege of gathering a few of the roses. These he tied together in a charming bouquet, and thus armed he made Dennis a smiling adieu and continued on his way toward the end of the garden, where, in the shadows of the summer-house, he knew Bettina would be waiting for him.
As he neared it, Billy tip-toed softly, in order to surprise the glad light in her eyes when she should see him. He was almost upon it when he became aware of the subdued murmur of voices within, one of which he recognized with an angry start as that of his one-time rival, Jack Trevelan. He stood perfectly still, looking toward the summer-house, and as he listened, Jack's voice became louder and finally ended in a passionate plea for love and forgiveness.
Billy gasped, and held his breath. Then he smiled to himself. Of course Bettina would always turn her eyes toward the summer-house, and when she saw him, and point toward the door, and after Jack had crept away, he, Billy, would go in and the would throw his arms around him, and he would do for her.
He peered through the lattice of the leaves, saw Bettina stand up, throw back her head, and then stretch out her arms with a yearning gesture toward Jack, saying, "Yes, forgive me, darling. Take me, I am yours, wholly yours. The other was all a miserable mistake."
Raising his hand in a dazed fashion to his face, Billy turned around, and stumbled back up the path to the room. He could not believe his ears! That Bettina, his Bettina, who had sworn so faithfully to remain true to him but two short weeks before, should be capable of such treachery! His mind seemed paralyzed; only two words kept repeating themselves insistently upon his brain—"wholly yours—wholly yours."
He turned mechanically, and saw his brother seated upon a rustic bench. The latter jumped up with a hearty exclamation of pleasure, but stopped at the sight of the dumb misery depicted on Billy's face.
"Why, what's the matter, old chap?" he gravely asked. And then the boy in Billy came uppermost, and he haltingly blurted out the whole story of what he had seen. When he had ended, Billy raised his eyes to his brother's face, but started back in amazement, for the latter had unmistakably given way to mirth of the most violent sort.
"Oh, oh, Billy—don't say another word, but come—with me!" he gasped, and still choking with laughter, he hurried Billy into the house, where, from a table in the hall, he took up a small pamphlet, turned over

The Canadian Magazine.

There is a commendable variety of matter in the September Canadian Magazine. 'The Mystery of Edward Blake' is the title of an interesting essay on several aspects of this great Reform leader in Ontario. 'The Highways and Byways of Dublin,' with fine illustrations, is a delightful sketch of Ireland's capital, while equally charming is the sketch of the Thames River by Louise Hayter Bitchell. A. J. Clark contributes a valuable sketch of Captain Kennedy, a Canadian who made two attempts to discover the fate of Sir John Roerlin. The short stories are exceedingly good, in particular 'Only an Egg' by Bernard Maddiman, and 'Madeline Boyart,' a translation of a Canadian story from the French of Fancher de St. Maurice. There are as well several reproductions of sketches in charcoal by George Chavignand, and a number of poems of merit.

The September Rod and Gun.

Boonycastle Dale's 'Every Day Scene with the Indian Trapper' opens the September Rod and Gun in Canada. The Adventures of a German Hunter in America, being a translation from the German by Hon. William Brewster Riddell, L. R. D., etc. relates the experiences of Friedrich Garstaker who visited America in 1837 and went bear hunting in the Ozark mountains. This is 'some bear story'. Duck hunting is given considerable attention in this issue and includes duck shooting on the river Scungog, at Long Point, on the St. Lawrence on the Kootenay district and an amusing Western tale entitled 'Hunting in Sage Brush Like's Duck Pond'. Decoy Shooting by Reginald Gourlay is deserving of special mention as is also a well illustrated article on Rearing Wild Ducks in Captivity. Mr. James Dickson, a veteran sportsman, makes some suggestions and criticisms regarding Mr. Kelly Evans' Fish and Game report. 'Pens and Dens' is the subject of the Fox article in this issue.

'Push,' said the button.
'Take pains,' said the window.

The Chances Against You

"Oh, I will be all right in a few days," says the person who is tired out and has to drag himself to his daily work because the nervous system is exhausted.
Unfortunately nervous diseases do not right themselves, and the wasting process which has brought you to this condition keeps right on until there is a complete breakdown.
You must get the building-up process started, so that, instead of being built up you will be broken down. You will find the balance on the other side and know that you are gradually getting strong and well.
Dr. Chase's Nerve Food will help you wonderfully if you only give it a reasonable chance. As the system is built up you will find such symptoms as headache, sleeplessness and indigestion leaving you. You will find the old energy coming back. The mind and body will better serve you, and you will see a new pleasure in life.

A Heroine of the War of 1812-14.

Nearly a century ago, in a district which was then a theatre of war, a brave and chivalrous deed was performed by a patriotic Canadian woman which has since been perpetuated in many ways, but more recently by the erection at her graveside of a beautiful monument. The name of Laura Secord will always illumine the pages of Canadian history. Alone she walked nearly 20 miles, by a circuitous, difficult and perilous route, through woods and swamps and over many roads, to warn a British outpost at De Cew's Falls of an intended attack and thereby enabled Lieut. Fitzgibbon, on June 24th, 1813, with five times as few of his men, to beat some 15,000 Indians, and a small force of Six Nation and other Indians, under Capt. Wm. Johnson Kerr and Dominique Ducharme to surprise and attack the enemy at Beechwood (or Beaver Dams) and after a short engagement, to secure Col. Boerstler, of the U. S. army and his entire force of 542 men and two field pieces. The monument stands with its easy bearing of the sound of Niagara's roar and a short distance from the historic battle-ground of Landy's Lane. Recognized as long in coming to Laura Secord, for it was not until 1853—forty years after her exploit—that there appeared in print an account of her twenty miles' walk on that hot day in June, 1813. Seven years later, in 1860 Edward Prince of Wales (afterwards King Edward VII) during his visit to the Niagara district, heard the story of her heroic deed, and sent her a gift of two pounds.

First Encyclopedia.

The most ancient known attempt at what is called in these days an 'encyclopedia' was Pliny's 'Natural History.' This old work, a very high authority throughout the middle ages, is really a remarkable production and well deserves the fame that for so many ages belonged to it. Pliny, who died in 79 A. D., was not a naturalist, a physician or an artist and did not pretend to be the wisest man of his time, yet such was his interest in knowledge that he devoted the leisure hours of a busy public life to compiling the work, which did a vast amount of good in the world and paved the way for the comprehensive encyclopedias of the present day.

Do you mean that girl with the spots on her face?

Overheard in a Street-Car. There's a lesson right there! Little blemishes of complexion, small sores, eruptions, spots, are not only unpleasant to the person afflicted, but are the first thing noticed by other people.

Pert Paragraphs.

When a girl looks on marriage through the gauzy film of bridal finery she has a rude shock awaiting her from the stove shiner and scrubbing brush.
And there's a heap of difference between deserving what we want and wanting what we deserve, with the majority of us on the unregenerated side.
Many a man remains a bachelor because the girl who is desirable enough for him to marry is too expensive for him to support.
Danger is a stimulant that brings out the best that is in a man—if it doesn't scare him silly and make him run to keep his feet warm.
An old bachelor is a man who has been considered too colorless to offer any fun to husband hunters.
There are men who go right along and get ahead all the time, but it is necessary to have a head in order to do it.
Money talks, but seldom for publication.
