WORD THROWERS.

By RUTH CAMERON.

RUTH CAMERON

In a certain household with which I am slightly acquainted is a child whom his parents regard as a problem. He is ten years old and he has never gotten over his childish habit of throwing things at people when he is angry. He has been punished for it again and again.

but when the fits of temper come he reaches for the nearest object and hurls it at the offender.

Not a perfectly normal child, you say. No, I suppose not. Throwing things because we are angry is a habit which we are supposed to leave behind in babyhood. Any full grown person who throws things is likely to land either in the insane asylum or the prison. All of which sound too obvious to say and I shouldn't say it except as a prelude to this:

If throwing things is unforfeitable why should throwing words be regarded so mildly?

Don't words hurt just as much as things sometimes?

Tongue Wounds and Sword Wounds.
"A wound from the tongue," says Pythagoras, "is worse than a wound from a sword, for the latter affects only the body, the former, the spirit."

And yet people who would never think of reaching for a sword and wounding another through a lifetime, words kill friendship and love and hope. Words come back like a boomerang to pierce the heart whence they came.

"I Didn't Mean It!" No Justification.
"You know I didn't mean anything I said," we may explain. "What of that? Does the man who throws the nearest object mean to hurt his friend? No, he obeys a blind impulse of rage and the word thrower does the same. If you were told you could take a dozen occasions out of your life wouldn't more than half of those you selected be times when you said some unforfeitable word?"

If that is true, the next time you feel an impulse of anger sweeping away the restraints of kindness and decency, stop a moment and ask yourself, word thrower and thing thrower, is there so much difference in guilt between them?

Question.—Suppose a man and wife have lived together for years, seemingly happy enough, perhaps have a small family. For some reason the man has ceased entirely to love his wife and vice versa, and it is impossible for the love to be rekindled. Both hesitate to resort to divorce as a means of separation. Would it not be better to resort to divorce as a means of separation. Would it not be better if one or the other took a few belongings and went away, thus bringing a climax to the very unpleasant position? As a matter of course a divorce would be likely to follow, but without so much publicity—An interested Reader.

Answer.—If neither wants to marry again why not simply a separation instead of divorce? Perhaps that might teach you that you would be no happier apart than together. And if a divorce still seemed desirable after a few years, you could take up the matter then.

Mapleton's Peanut Butter is made in England. When you buy it you know its value. When the children get it on their bread they know its quality. Cheap nourishment these strenuous times. The proof of the pudding is the eating of it.

Words leave wounds that never heal, poisoned wounds that ache and fester through a lifetime; words kill friendship and love and hope. Words come back like a boomerang to pierce the heart whence they came.
