

This Ointment Possesses Power to Heal the Skin

Two Cases Which Prove the Extraordinary Healing Power of Dr. Chase's Ointment.

The use of Dr. Chase's Ointment is wonderfully satisfactory because you can actually see the results accomplished. It is surprising what change can be brought about in a single night by this great healing ointment.

Mrs. W. W. Oliver, Port George, Annapolis Co., N.S., writes: "I am going to tell you my experience with Dr. Chase's Ointment. There was a spot on my face something like a mole, but it kept getting worse, and several doctors whom I consulted said it was cancer, and that it would have to be cut or burned out. I intended having this done, but changed my mind when my brother recommended Dr. Chase's Ointment. Before I had finished one box of the ointment this skin trouble had gone, and has not bothered me since. I cannot praise Dr. Chase's Ointment too much, and you are at liberty to publish this letter."

CHAPTER XVI
Love is Blind.
Either from lust of gold or like a girl valuing the giddy pleasure of the eyes.

THE morning after the flower show and the dinner at the hall, Chudleigh came down to the breakfast table looking rather pale and out of sorts, with two heavy, black marks under his eyes.

"You look unwell, Chud, dear," said Maud, as he bent to kiss her forehead.

"Yes," said Chudleigh; "been awake all night."

"You must have some tea," said Maud, ringing for it, "and go and lie down afterward."

"I'll have the tea, but not the sofa, Maudie," he said. "I have to ride over to Woodfells about the timber on the four-acre; and, by the way, I promised the steward I would check that file of accounts this morning," and he stifled a weary sigh.

"Poor Chud!" said Maud, leaning over his shoulder and pressing her white hand against his brow. "You work as hard as a banker's clerk. Cannot you stay at home and rest for one day?"

"No, Maudie, my child; the estate is a large one, you know, and requires looking after. How do you think the flower show went off yesterday?"

"Oh, delightful, Chud," she replied; "the people seemed pleased beyond expression. I believe any one of them would do anything for you. I always thought they harbored a kindly feeling for me, but I think they really idolize you. Carlotta said last night that she heard your name on their lips as she passed every group."

Chudleigh raised his cup, as she pronounced Carlotta's name, and winced.

"Carlotta does not come to see us so often as she promised. I told her we had offended her last night, but she only laughed, and said she had been busy."

Where did you go, Chudleigh—into the picture gallery?" Chudleigh nodded.

"Carlotta's fond of pictures," mused Maud, innocently. "I think she herself draws and paints. I should not be surprised to find that she did everything that was clever and beautiful."

"Ah!" said Chudleigh, with a feigned indifference, though his eyes grew dim staring into the tea cup. "I'll have a piece more toast, if you'll pass it."

"The papers, sir," said a footman, entering and laying the day's news on the table.

Glad of a shield and screen, Chudleigh caught up the Times, and commenced looking it over.

"Let me see, where is papa's Standard?" said Maud, turning the pile over. "Ah! here it is. I must air it for him. I wonder what makes him so late in the library?"

"Maud," interrupted Chudleigh, with an agitation perfectly inexplicable to his sister, "Lord Crownbrilliant died yesterday morning—"

"Yes, Mr. Hartfield's father. He, Mr. Hartfield, has the title now."

She looked at him, and in his despairing face and trembling tones with her quick love saw like a flash of light the hidden cause.

Stretching out her hand until it whispered, tenderly: "Clasped his, as it lay on the table, she said: 'What have you to fear, Chudleigh?'"

"Everything," he said, dropping his head on his breast and turning his face from her. "Everything. I have lost the race, Maudie—lost!"

With a tender-hearted cry, she raised his hand to her lips, murmuring: "Poor Chud! poor Chud!"
