An Indispensable Favorite

Wealth and Beauty at Stake!

CHAPTER XXXIX

"If you cannot tell, neither can I!" Yolande retorts, sharply. "Even you must admit that I have humbled myself sufficiently. I have followed you uninvited, and found you unwelcome, and—and showed you, in spite of all efforts, neglect, coldness, cruelty, how I felt." Her face is crimson, her hands are burning hot and cold by turns, and she is trembling visibly from head to foot, as she turns away abruptly and hurriedly recedes her mantle and adjusts her hat. "I haven't a grain of what women call 'proper pride,' I suppose," she goes on, more hurriedly, "antagonizing her trembling fingers in her ribbons. "But I can't go until I ask you, Captain Glynn, why you refuse to accept the allowance which the laws give you—legally your very own, you know, under your marriage settlement—and permit my trustees to add to that sum to enable you to live differently from this?"

"Oh, 'this' is good enough for me!" he says, carelessly. "I was very comfortable until the new manager came. He is a rather unbearable sort of person; but I have no doubt that the proprietor, Mr. Daville—he's a Parisian-American speculator, a very rich man, and not half a bad fellow—can get me another post if I throw up this one. By and by, now I think of it, Daville used to be an acquaintance of the noble earl's. I could not live

98 OUT OF EVERY 100 WOMEN BENEFITED

An Absolutely Reliable Statement Important to Every Woman

Remarkable Results Shown by a Nation Wide Canvass of Women Purchasers of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. 50,000 Women Answer

For some time a circular has been enclosed with each bottle of our medicine bearing this question: "Have you received benefit from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?"

Replies to date, have been received from over 50,000 women answering that question:

98 per cent of which say YES. That means that 98 out of every 100 women who take the medicine for the ailments for which it is recommended are benefited by it.

This is a most remarkable record of efficiency. We doubt if any other medicine in the world equals it.

Think of it—only two women out of 100 received no benefit—98 success out of a possible 100.

Did you ever hear anything like it? We must admit that we ourselves are astonished.

Such evidence should induce every woman suffering from any ailment peculiar to her sex to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and see if she can't be one of the 98. The Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Cohasset, Ontario.

tempting me. I know I owe you an amount. I began to believe I could make it to you."

His hands clasp her arm tenderly and warmly, and he comes close to her side.

"Do you know," he half whispers, "I believe you are almost the only one in the world who has been faithful." He stops abruptly, and, after a pause, asks in a slightly constrained voice, "When you said—or did you say? I forget—that you not know where I was until you got my address from Lady Pentreath, you did not mean that you thought I was in America—you knew I was in London?"

"I knew it this evening—of course not before," Yolande answers, briefly. "I heard from Lady Pentreath that you had returned quite a long time since. I knew nothing of it—how could I? Neither your mother nor I heard anything since that letter you wrote to me from New York twelve months ago. If Lady Nora had heard anything of you she would have told me at once, of course; she knew how I felt."

Her husband's grasp has tightened on her arm while she has been speaking, but he has averted his head. At the last trembling words he turns quickly, and, seizing her in his arms, strains her to his breast.

"Kiss me, Yolande!" he says, hoarsely and passionately. "My dear girl! My poor girl, it would have been well for you if you had never seen me nor heard my name."

"Oh, no, no!" Yolande whispers, clinging to him in unspoken joy, and pressing her sweet lips to his face. "If—you cared for me only a little, I should be the happiest girl in the world! I love you so much!"

"Do you?" he says, clasping her closer and caressing her head, with its coils of soft, brown hair, which is pressed to him, her hat being flung aside somewhere. "Then be the happiest girl in the world, darling! I care for you very much—more than for any one else in the world!" Dallas says, earnestly.

She clings more closely to him, and, with her face hidden and her cheek close to his, whispers again:

"But there was some one you loved, you know."

"I know there was," Dallas admits. "But you needn't be jealous, Yolande! I know I made rather a fool of myself in the past; but it is in the past, I swear to you! And my future is yours, my dear girl, and I will atone to you for that past, if you will trust me. Will you, darling?"

"Yes, yes—indeed I will!" she cries, grasping in glad eagerness. "And you are coming back to me again! Oh, Dallas! Oh, dearest, dearest!"

"Yes, I will come back to you, Yolande, dear, since you are willing to take me," Dallas answers, humbly, ashamed of himself for having so doubted and wronged this true, unwavering love. "And we will begin again, dear—shall we—have a proper honeymoon, you know. The first was a beeswax, gall-and-veneer moon—there wasn't an atom of honey in it. Eh, my little wife—shall we?"

"Yes, love," the girl mutters, wondering in her vague, dreamy happiness if this is not all some delicious vision of her own fond imagination.

"We will go to Switzerland, darling, and find some nice out-of-the-way place up in the mountains, where I believe one does subsist a good deal on honey, and rolls of coffee, and pastoral fairs of that kind—eh, Yolande?—spend the long, hot days in the pine woods, you doing crewel embroidery—or pretending to do it—and I lying on the moss at your feet, reading poetry to you—Tennyson, Rossetti, Jean Ingelow, Gerald Massey. I know how it's done! I've watched honey-mongering couples over so often; and Captain Glynn laughs heartily as he kisses his young, girlish wife again and again, and his spirits rise at the thought of the pleasant prospect so near, so sure, for him and for her.

But Yolande does not laugh; the weight of her happiness oppresses her—or something does. A chill, hopeless feeling, as in stepping into cold shadow out of warmth and sunlight, seems to fall over her.

"Whatever you please, whatever you please, so that I am with you, so that we shall not be parting ever again!" she mutters, pressing his hands against her heart.

SPOILED.

My neighbor, Richard Rinkum Roe, has long lived next to me, and finer people seldom grow than Richard used to be. He was a modest, quiet gent, in dear bygone days, about his useful chores he went, and made no grand stand plays. And when he talked it was of things that made a strong appeal; he spoke of books and wedding rings and art and needle work. I liked to gossip with him then, and when he went away I begged that he would come again and talk for half a day. He put some money in a ditch in Oklahoma soil, and now he's with the newly rich—his ditch produces oil. And now that he has many homes this Richard is a bore; he brags of every thing he owns, and makes his neighbors sore. He walks the streets with kingly stride as though he owned the earth; he's swollen with unwholesome pride which stirs the boys to mirth. He thinks men envy and admire as up the street he wends, but his loud actions only tire the chaps who were his friends. They think him, when he looms in view, a dismal also-ran. "Gee whizz," they sigh, "what wealth can do to spoil a decent man!"

More Inches—Less Brain.

ARE SHORT MEN REALLY CLEVERER THAN TALL?

One of the questions to be discussed at the forthcoming meeting of the British Association is that of the connection between a man's brains and his height. Scientists are anxious to find whether there is any real ground for supposing, as some people do, that short men are as a rule cleverer than tall ones.

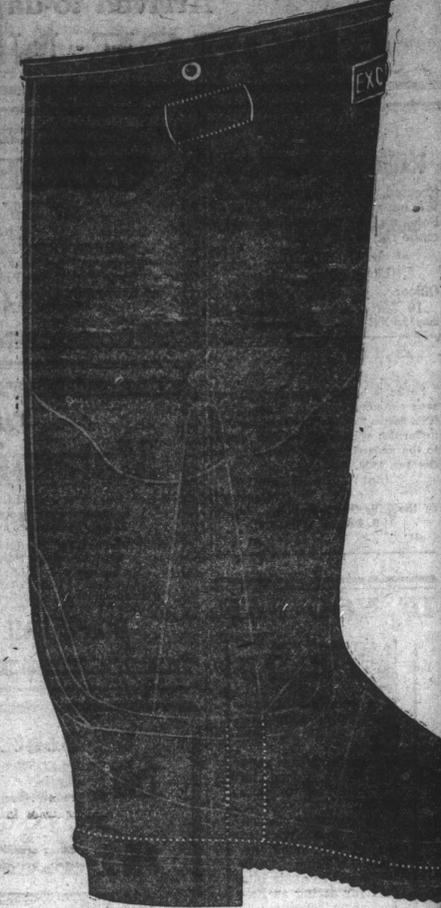

The belief was shared by Napoleon, among other famous men. He himself appeared to the casual observer to be so short that one biographer judged him to be only five feet two inches

Prophy-lactic Tooth Brush

PROPHY-LACTIC Tooth Brushes come in three sizes—adults', youths', and children's; and in three degrees of stiffness—hard, medium, and soft.

The tallest well-known actor is no doubt Mr. Arthur Broderick, who is five feet, ten-and-a-half, while the shortest famous composer is Mr. Edward German, who is five feet three-and-a-half.

in height. Actually he was five feet seven.

It is surprising how few people know the height of most of our famous men. How tall, for example, is King George? Not one person in a hundred could answer the question correctly. His Majesty is five feet seven inches in height!

Who is the tallest member of the Government? Probably Lord Carson could claim this distinction. He is six feet one inch in height. Mr. Austen Chamberlain is exactly six feet tall, and so is Earl Balfour.

Of famous lawyers, Sir Edward Marshall-Hall is perhaps the tallest. He is five feet eleven-and-a-half. Mr. Justice Darling, the great judge, is five feet six-and-a-half.

Our tallest well-known author is Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, who is six feet one. Sir Hall Caine is five feet seven, and Sir James Barrie is five feet five.

Among the clergy, the Bishop of London is a commanding figure, being five feet ten. The Rev. R. J. Campbell is five feet nine.

and fifty miles away, while the shock was felt at an even greater distance. Two thousand people killed, five thousand injured, and twenty thousand rendered homeless was the sum total of this great disaster.

Another big bang was heard when a munitions factory at Silvertown, London, blew up. The thunder-roll of the explosion was heard as far away as King's Lynn, while a lighted lamp, carried by a boy at Herne Hill, several miles away, was extinguished by its force.

Another colossal bang was that resulting from the explosion of fifty tons of dynamite at Johannesburg. The explosive was loaded in trucks in a railway siding and was detonated through careless handling.

In less than a second damage was done to the tune of more than a million pounds, while some scores of lives were lost. The bang was heard eighty miles away.

Some years ago a barge laden with gunpowder was gliding leisurely along the Regent's Canal, near the London Zoo, when, without warning, it was blown sky-high.

Not many lives were lost, but a vast amount of damage was done to property in the neighbourhood, while some of the Zoo animals were literally frightened to death.

The sound of this explosion was heard far beyond the limits of London.

MARKET REPORTS

indicate that there is no surplus of Anthracite Coal in the U.S. The shortage caused by the strike of Anthracite Miners last year has not been made up, and American hard coal will, in all probability, be hard to get and high priced. Coke is an excellent substitute for hard coal, and we have on hand a stock of same that will soon be disposed of, because a shortage of hard coal invariably creates an increased demand for our product.

We advise our customers to book their requirements as soon as possible.
