CHAPTER XXI.

He smiled. "Come," he said, "that is right; forget the past and look forward to the future. You must have expected this; you knew better than to suppose I should leave you forever. You know that I should come and claim my right, my reward!"

"Reward," she repeated, brushing her hair from her forehead with a mechanical gesture, as if she wanted more light; "reward!"

"Ay," he said, reward for all these years' work. Who works for nothing?—not you, Leonora, Lady Melville, nor I. I have worked to place you where you are—here, snug in Riverhall—and I have come to claim my right to share it with you.

She rose and clasped her forehead with both hands. Then, throwing them above her head, she cried, with eyes upturned:

"Merciful Heaven! how blind, how blind! I see it all now that it is too late. You are the fender that has prompted all this work. You are the Chevalier de Morn!"

"I am," he said, holding the hands of his back to the blaze, and smiling at her with the old masterful smile.

"You are the cursed doctor, who murdered—poisoned Sir Ralph and Edith Melville!"

"I am," he said, "but an accomplice and servant of yours, my lady. You may remember, perhaps, bestowing a pretty little casket with a pretty inclosure on a certain governess."

"Oh Heaven! You, too, were in league with that she-fiend, and between you have worked my ruin in this world and the next!"

"A very comfortable ruin," he said, waving his white hand round the luxurious room with a smile.

"That other villain, too," she continued, running over the past and its complications, and trying to unravel the skein which she herself had helped to entangle. "You, too, helped him, perhaps, to tyrannize over the tangle."

"Lord Harcourt, you mean," he said, and a dark frown knit his brow. "No, Leonora, he is as much my enemy as you; my lord and I have a little matter to settle; he is in good time. No, Lady Melville, there is no sympathy between my Lord Bully and me. Call me what you will—the fiend it

PAINS IN LEFT SIDE AND BACK

Other Troubles Women Often Have Relieved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Lachine, Quebec.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because I suffered with pains in my left side and back, and with weakness and other troubles women so often have. I was this way about six months. I saw the Vegetable Compound advertised in the 'Montreal Standard' and I have taken four bottles and I feel so much better I would not be without it. I also use Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash. I recommend the medicine to my friends and I am willing for you to use my letter as a testimonial."—Mrs. M. W. ROSS, 560 Notre Dame Street, Lachine, Quebec.

Doctor Said An Operation Proved, Alberta.—"Perhaps you will remember sending me one of your books a year ago. I was in a bad condition and would suffer awful pains at times and could not do anything. The doctor said I could not have children unless I went under an operation. I read testimonials of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in the papers and a friend recommended me to take it. After taking three bottles I became much better and now have a bonny baby girl four months old. I do my housework and help a little with the charges. I recommend the Vegetable Compound to my friends and am willing for you to use this testimonial letter."—Mrs. A. A. ADAMS, Box 54, Provost, Alberta, C.

to take me to the inn? To-morrow I shall go to town to get a special license; two days hence, Leonora, you will be the wife of Melchior Clifford, who has waited all these years for you."

She had sunk into her old attitude now, but when he rang the bell she looked up, and, with his eye fixed on hers, ordered the brougham as he had directed.

It was a point gained, and he would not spoil it by stopping longer.

"Good-night, my bride-to-be," he said, stopping and taking her hand. "Goodnight. Two days hence and we will set the bells going to a happier meter than they have been used to lately."

She looked at him as if she only half comprehended his meaning and with her hand in his started suddenly.

"I want Kate Lucas," she said, passing her hand over her forehead.

"Kate Lucas you will never see again," he said. "She is gone, with all your other troubles," and he waved his white hand.

"Never again," she said, looking troubled and bewildered. "Never again."

"Never!" he said.

"Why? How?" she said. "She will come back."

"No," he said.

Then, seeing that she had lost the thread and was groping for it helplessly in her confusion, he helped her. "She was in my power, Leonora. Poor girl! she deserved a better fate. Now she is in yours."

"In mine?" she repeated, monotonously.

"Ay," he said. "Go upstairs and look at your jewel case. If a single stone or trinket remains, Kate is not half so sensible a girl as I thought."

"My jewels!" she repeated. "Stolen items?"

"Ay," he said, "stolen items, every one of them. She will not dare to come back to set her foot in England, for you will be on the alert to arrest her, and she knows it. Poor girl! it was a shame to take her in her own trap with her own bait, but I have never spared man nor woman that stood in my path to you, Leonora; and now that she, the last of the straws, is swept away, I do but wait the crowning of my endeavors. Good-night, sweet Leonora; how the old days come back to me at the name! Good-night. Two days hence and you are my wife and under my protection."

He kissed her cold hand again, and then, as the servant threw open the door to announce that the brougham was ready, bowed with the air of a courtier and swept out.

The brougham was at the entrance and two servants stood ready to help the visitor in and close the door after him.

They thought him nothing less than a prince, and by some strange instinct already saw in him their future master.

"Where shall I say, sir?" asked one of them.

A Long Hike for a Wager

WINNIPEG, Man., July 23.—Ten thousand dollars is the wager which J. E. McCoy expects to win from the executive of the San Francisco Athletic club for his hike from San Francisco to Halifax, N.S., and return, touching at Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver. When he reached Winnipeg on his return trip he was seven days ahead of schedule, and barring accidents, Mr. McCoy expects to complete the long hike within the prescribed time limit.

McCoy started from San Francisco on October 25, 1924 and arrived at Halifax, April 17, 1925. He has three months to reach his starting point.

According to the stipulation of the wager, McCoy must travel only on highways and is forbidden to take to the tracks. As he could not find a highway along the north shores of Lake Superior, he left Canada at the Soo, and went through United States territory until he was able to enter near Fort William. He is entirely dependent upon the charity of people in the districts through which he passes for his sustenance.

In passing through Montana, McCoy was held up by bandits, but as he had nothing to give them, he was released. He lived without food for eight days and although he came across a number of Indian villages he was unable to make them understand his plight.

The hiker must not accept a "lift" but must stretch his legs day after day along the dusty roads until he reaches his goal in San Francisco.

Would Not Miss the Celebration

BANFF, Alta.—Eighty-year-old, Father Wisely, chief of the Nordygg branch of the Stony Indians, dressed and departed from the Sarcee hospital and walked to Morley, a distance of eighty miles, in two days.

He was confined in the hospital for eye treatment and fearing that the doctors in charge would not permit him to leave in order to bring his tribe through the mountains for the Indian celebration at Banff recently, he took no chances. The "chief" sneaked away early in the morning and walked across the prairies through the extreme heat. He was practically barefooted, when he arrived at the reserve.

Old Peter slept in the open and survived on berries and water. He has only one eye left and that doesn't serve him very well, but his Indian instinct carried him across country to his goal.

It's a very strong flavoring extract and takes very little to flavor a freezer of ice cream—Shirriff's Vanilla is being built to dimensions suitable for passing through the locks of the Welland Canal, Ontario, by omitting 144 feet of the midship body. This portion will be fabricated at the builders' yard and taken out to the Great Lakes, cut in two, and the fabricated portion built in place by the owners, thus completing her full dimensions of 379 feet.

Made Him Suspect Himself

KELVINGTON, Sask., July 20.—When Charles Ferguson, a local resident, and avowed teetotaler, touched a match to waste paper in the furnace of his store, one morning recently, he got the biggest shock of his 40-odd years. A lone devilish duck emerged through the blazing doorway and flapped around his feet. It was found to be a bright, burning scorching wings which prevented it from flying. The bird was placed on the shores of a nearby lake to convalesce.

It is believed that the duck, of the wild "wood" variety mistook the store chimney for a harbor of refuge, and explored its way into the furnace.

The Latest Fad

London, Eng., July 23.—(Canadian Press)—The latest fad is to have a wax mask made of your face, and society women are flocking to the studio of Charles Herman, the French sculptor, says the Graphic. It is curious how fads run in cycles, dying away and recurring again. Mr. Herman, who is in his sixties, made his first mask in his teens, and he has made 16,000 of them. "It was Maria Camilla, a Paris trapeze artist, who started the craze," he says. "She was famous in the eighties, and every night she used to take from her red garter a flexible image of her face and throw it to her admirers. Then it became the craze to have the mask of your face made after a Turkish bath."

Lake Boat Will Carry as Cargo

HER OWN MIDSHIPS SECTION.

In an address made at the launching of the ship Glenledi from the Wallend shipyards, at Jarrow, England, Sir George Hunter said that great sacrifices are being made by both the shipbuilding employers and the workers, to make possible the carrying-on of the shipbuilding industry in Great Britain. According to advice received by Bankers Trust Company of New York from its British Information Service, Sir George said that he had noticed that the president of the Board of Trade had stated it was the duty of the government to tell the truth without fear. Sir George added, that it was the duty of the government, it was the duty of everyone else interested in the country. One thing, he said that people did not realize, was that but for capital and capitalism everyone would be unemployed. It was only through the reserves of capital that people could get orders and go on building ships at all. They were told by some of the labor leaders and employers that capital ought to make sacrifices. They were making great sacrifices. The shipbuilding fraternity were giving up all their profit, not only part of it. He wished that they might even get 1 per cent. The workmen were making sacrifices too. They were co-operating with the employers. On the other hand, the people in the sheltered trades, or as we would say in this country, the protected trades, were not co-operating with them, and were keeping up costs, and were keeping them from stemming the unemployment. He was convinced that they would have to work harder and longer, and until he was realized they would not be able to terminate unemployment. He said it depended mainly on the railway and miners. He could not see how they were going to have a chance of prosperity so long as miners were working only 7 hours a day, whereas in other countries they were working up to 10 hours a day.

The Glenledi is an unusual vessel, because although it will eventually be 379 feet in length and carry 4,825 tons on 18 foot draught in fresh water, it is being built to dimensions suitable for passing through the locks of the Welland Canal, Ontario, by omitting 144 feet of the midship body. This portion will be fabricated at the builders' yard and taken out to the Great Lakes, cut in two, and the fabricated portion built in place by the owners, thus completing her full dimensions of 379 feet.

French Livestock War Losses Replaced

France has to a very appreciable extent, reconstituted her livestock which was severely depleted at the time of the armistice, according to official figures issued by the French Ministry of Agriculture and transmitted to the Bankers Trust Company of New York from its French Information Service.

From these statistics it would appear that the number of oxen and cattle which totalled 14,737,710 in 1918, 12,360,880 in 1919, and 12,749,390 in 1923 has now been raised to 14,024,960.

The total number of pigs, which in 1918 was 7,035,850, in 1919 only 3,969,020 and in 1923 5,405,880, is now 6,901,320.

As regards horses, the fluctuations during the same period amount to the following figures: 1918, 5,220,000; 1919,

2,222,930; 1923, 2,947,970; 1924, 2,809,400.

The sheep which in 1913 numbered 18,131,390 and 9,025,310 in 1923 are now estimated at 10,172,520.

It's a very strong flavoring extract and takes very little to flavor a freezer of ice cream—Shirriff's Vanilla is being built to dimensions suitable for passing through the locks of the Welland Canal, Ontario, by omitting 144 feet of the midship body.
