So Curtis announced that his bride was installed at the Plaza Hotel, and, while he and Devar escaped through the cellars, Steingall took Uncle Horace and Aunt Louisa boldly through the lobby. A taxi was waiting there, and he gave the driver the address of the police headquarters down town, but re-directed him when they were safe from pursuit, and the three, so

"No," he said, with a cheerfulness he was far from feeling. "The fact is, I—I—have brought some friends to see you. That is, some of them will, I hope, be your very good friends—my uncle and aunt, and young Howard Devar, whom I spoke about earlier. There is a detective, too—a very decent fellow named Steingall. "Though you think I might have mentioned them sooner? Well, the strangest part of the business is that they should be in New York at all. I haven't the remotest idea as to why they are here, or how they dropped across me. But isn't it a rather fortunate thing? They may prove useful in a hundred ways."
"Please don't keep them waiting. What does the detective wan!?"

"You may be astonished by the number of facts you will produce when Steingall questions you. And, I had better warn you that my uncle is even now consulting the head waiter about a wedding feast. He has adopted you without reservation on my poor description." His frankly admiring look brought a blush to her cheeks, but she only laughed a little constrainedly, and murmured that she would try to be as complacent as the occasion demanded. Events were certainly in league to lend her wedding night a close resemblance to the real thing. And as Curtis descended to the foyer to summon their waiting guests, he decided Curtis, too, put in a quiet word which threw light on the situation.

"As I told you a few minutes since, I was not aware that my uncle and aunt were in New York," he said. "I cannot even guess how they came to find me so opportunely, and we have hardly been able to say a word to each other yet, because they were in the thick of the police inquiry when I met them in my hotel." summon their waiting guests, he decided then and there not to mar the festivities by any explanatons concerning Jean de Courtois's second time on earth. Steingal had practically settled the question by confining the Frenchman to his room for the remainder of the night. Why interfere with an admirable arrangement? Let the wretched intriguer be forgotten till the morrow, at any rate!

CHAPTER IX.

Eleven o'Clock. "In multitude of counselors the afety," says the Book of Proverbs. By, the philosophy attributed to So exhibits a soundness of judgment which is unrivalled, so it is reasonable to assume that in Hebrew gnomic thought four do not constitute a multitude, because four people agreed with Curtis that there was not the slightest need to mention Jean d Courtois to Hermione that evening, an five people were wrong, though in ninety nine cases out of a hundred they might have been right. Hermoine herself admitted that she would have believed Curtis implicitly had he explained the circumstances which accounted for his undoubted conviction that de Courtois was dead; indeed she went so for as to say dead; indeed, she went so far as to say that, as a matter of choice, she infinitely preferred the American to the Frenchman in the role of a husband pro tem. She had in the role of a husband pro tem. She had never regarded de Courtols from any other point of view than as her paid ally, and she was beginning to share Curtis's belief that the man was a doubledealer, a fact which helped to modify her natural regret at the report of his death in her behalf.

In a calmer mood, too, Curtis would have been quick to realize that a girl who had reposed such supreme confidence in his probity was entitled to share his fullest knowledge of the extraordinary bond which united them, but for one half-hour he was swayed by expediency, and expediency aften exercises a disrupting influence on a friendship founded on faith. He only meant to spare her the dismay He only meant to spare her the dismay which could harly fail to manifest itself when she heard that de Courtois was alive, and that additional complications anve, and that additional complications must arise with reference to the wrongful use of the marriage license; in reality, he was doing himself a bitter injustice.

But, having elected for a definite course, he was not a man who would deviate from it by a hair's breadth. When the junta in the vestibule of the Plaza Hotel had appropriated to remain with on the topic of omised to remain mute on the topic of Courtois, he dismissed the matter from his mind as having no further influence "Is there any means of recoving my overcoat?" he asked Steingall, remembering the change of garments when a waiter asked if the gentlemen cared to deposit their hats and coats in the cloak-room.

"Yes," said the detective. "Just empty

Steingall went straight to the telephone room, and Curtis ascended to his suite of apartments. He knocked at Hermione's door, and her "Yes, who is there?" came with disconcerting. Evidently, she was far from being adeep yet.
