A Young Lady of Vancouver Seeks and Finds Death in False Creek.

Who Was She, and What Was the Cause of Her Suicidal Act?

VANCOUVER, June 27 .- At seven o'clock on Sunday evening, as churchgoers were bridge, crossing False Creek, James Holden, noticed a young lady neatly dressed in dark material and wearing a white bonnet step to the side of the bridge and, leaning on the railing, gaze intently at the flowing tide. Ten minutes passed by. The bridge was free from pedestrians, when the young woman, after quietly placing her parasol and prayer book on the bridge sill, climbed on the railing and without a sound allowed herself to drop into the water on the False greatly at the False greatly at the state of the False creek side. Upon learning the story, he telegraphed to his two uncles in Wisconsin, who soon joined him at Sheboygan. They at once began a thorough search. After four days' travel through a swamp, they came across a rocky cavern at the edge of a beaver meadow. The barking of a dog of a beaver meadow. The barking of a dog directed the attention of the searchers to the mouth of a cave, where they encountered a being devoid of clothing, except a few rags. His beard, which was a fithy brown, reached from his eyes to his waist, and his hair fell over his shoulders. He was short in stature and very muscular. In his hand he held a rifle and his manner and look indicated the lunatic. The searchers asked for directions about the country, and he said "The river, the river," and that was all he would say. They tried to get him to talk further, but he would say nothing but "Rullets, bullets!"

"Bullets, bullets!"
One of the party pulled out a 44 cartridge and reaching for the cave dweller's rifle saw on the stock the name of Abe Clark in brass tacks. "Where is the owner of this gun?" said young Clark, but the reply was only a look of diabolical hatred and brutality.

They were at once convinced that old man Clark had been killed by this fiend. Then that walked into the cave or crevice, and they walked into the cave or crevice, and, hanging on a projecting rock, found a coat similar to that worn by Clark. The son picked up the garment, and in a pocket discovered the last letter written by the family to his father. When they turned about the strange denizen of the cave had disappeared. They could find no trace of him, but hung

FIRE AT SEATTLE.

Nearly Half a Million Dollars Worth of Loss Sustained—Injuries to Firemen

Great Excitement—Numerous Explosions—Prompt Resumption of Business by the Sufferers.

SEATTLE, June 28 .- The most destructive fire that has visited Seattle since the memorable conflagration of June 6, 1889, visited the city yesterday afternoon, when the and Yesler avenue, was almost completely destroyed, with a loss of nearly $500,000. That the fire did not spread to the adjoining buildings and cause an immensely greater loss is attributed to the efficiency of the fire department.

It was shortly after 6 o'clock when the alarm was sounded and despite the celerity with which the department reached the cene, when the first engine arrived the moke was rolling in thick, brown masses Deservedly Recalled.

Washington, June 27.—Secretary Elkins oday issued an order recalling Captain form Paris. Borup's recall was re-

it. It was what is termed a blind fire.

Presently the flames, which had seemingly been confined to the basement, began to show their fiery tongues in the other portions of the building, and with their appearance rumors began to be circulated that considerable blasting and giant powder and dynamite was stored in the building, and the crowd, which numbered thousands and had given the police considerable difficulty in keeping them back off the ropes, showed much greater respect for the municipal authorities than it had before.

Meanwhile the inmates of the Northern hotel, two blocks away, were in a state of high excitement whether the fire would reach that structure or not, and the office was thronged with guests of both sexes, some irresolute whether to remove their baggage or not, others hastily getting all that was portable of their belongings together and bringing it to the lower floor, while still others, disregarding the smoke that permeated every room, especially the dining room, deliberately finished their dinners. Calmest and coolest among all, however, was Miss Stella Wagner, the bookkeeper, who had charge of the office in the absence of the regular clerks, who were superintending the removal of the guest's baggage, and her apparent faith that the building would not suffer serious damage, and her reassuring answers to all questions did a great deal toward preventing confusion from getting "worse confounded."

The firemen were manfully standing at their posts, not a man finching, and yet, despite the thousands of gallons of water which were being thrown mit the building from every possible point, the breath of the fierce flames grew hotter and hotter, and the masses of brown and amber-colored smoke rolled upward in increasing volumes, while the wind carried blazing fragments for a long distance, rendering the danger of the confiagration spreading more imminent. One of these lit upon the awning over A. Fortlouis & Co.'s store, on the corner of Commercial and Washington streets, and immediately it began to blaze. Water in buckets and pitchers, applied from above and below, speedily extinguished the incipient flames, but it acted as a warning to the occupants of stores on the opposite side of the street, and with axes and levers the awnings were speedily torn from their factories.
