St. John, during the next ten days will bestir itself as never before, and the response, it is confidently hoped, will be worthy of the city and its loyal traditions. Mr. Lloyd George aptly remarked recently that "it is no use try-live to bridge a twelve-foot stream with ing to bridge a twelve-foot stream with an eleven-foot plank." The war news is more encouraging. The German rush into Russia is losing its force, and at all but one point along the entire front the enemy is now said to be held in check. The longer the German lines of communication became the more difficult is their task, and the Russian winter is approaching. It is further declared that there is approaching. It is territory. There is nothing the German lines of communication become the more difficult is their task, and the Russian winter is approaching. It is further declared that there is now a very large proportion of very young men and old men in the German ranks in the east. Their losses in this great drive must have been enormous.

The news from the Dardanelles tells of an important gain by the Allies, and of heavy losses inflicted on the Turks. The British and French forces in German swill not do, if any advantage is to be gained.

A widow who intended to succeed her husband as the manager of a country hotel, advertised the fact in the local papers after this manner:—"This hotel will be kept by the widow of the former landlord, Mr. Higgins, who died last summer on a new and approved plan."

The British and French forces in German West Africa are gradually affecting the conquest of that territory.

There is no change of importance along the front in France and Belgium. Roumania continues to refuse to permit partisans to quit politics and attend to prove the conductor of the conductor of the conductor of the conquest of that territory.

Balkan situation generally appears to be more favorable to the Allies.

The back-down of Germany in the affair of the Arabic has lessened the tension of the situation between that country and the United States, but the

"We have but one question to ask ourselves—we of all ranks, of all grades, and all trades. Are we doing enough to secure victory, because victory means ife for our country? It means the fate of freedom for ages to come. There is no price which is too great for us to pay that is within our power. There is too much disposition to cling to the amerities of peace. Business as usual, enjoyment as usual, fashions, lock-outs, strikes, ca' canny, spreea—all as usual. Wages must go up, profits must also improve; but prices must at all costs be kept down. (Laughter and cheens.) You will forgive me, I am sure, for speaking quite plainly. (Cheera.) No man must be called upon to serve the state unless he wants to; even then he has only to be called upon to do exactly what he would like to do.—Not what he is chosen for, but what he himself would like to do. A man who could render more service by turning out munitions must be allowed to go to the front if he prefers to, and the man who would be better at the front must be allowed to go to the front if he prefers to, and the man who would be better at the front must be allowed to go to the front if he prefers to, and the man who would be better at the front must be allowed to go to the front if he prefers to, and the man who would be better at the front must be allowed to go to the front if he prefers to, and the man who would be better at the front must be allowed to go to the front if he prefers to, and the man who would be better at the front must be allowed to go to the front if he prefers to, and the man who would be better at the front must be allowed to go to the front if he prefers to, and the man who would be better at the front must be allowed to go to the front if he prefers to, and the man who would is a few of the min must be allowed to go to the front if he prefers to, and the man who would be better at the front must be allowed to go to the front if he prefers to, and the man who would is the prefers to an end they were taken on the transmitted to a fever. Brunswick. After the train left Truro two or three of the young men, who had taken seats in a first class coach, were requested to retire to the second class car, which they did. I examined the ticket of one of the boys and found that it called for second class transportation. Heing curiaus to see what accommodations were furnished for the brave young fellows who were responding to the S. O. S. signals of Britain, I followed them. I shall not undertake to describe the condition of the car further than to say that it was not the kind of vehicle in which any self-respecting person would ride if he could help himself.

So long as Canadian public opinion continues to tolerate that peculiar institution, the second class car, I suppose an autsider is not entitled to say much against it. But as a former Canadian and one still deeply interested in everything that pertains to Canada, I take the liberty of suggesting that a first class coach, is none too good for the volunteers and the dignity of "the King's business" is impaired by carrying them in second class cars.
