Lower Cove team in a rather loosely played but closely contested game that lasted seven innings. Dureen was on the slab for the Franklins, while "Gunner" White was the artist put forward for the St. Joseph's, and his slow shoots were certainly puzzling, so much so that only five hits were made off his delivery. "Boiler" Dureen was also effective, holding the St. Joseph's boys down to six but allowed them to bunch in the sixth.

When the Franklins went to bat in the seventh inning the score stood 4 each. Harris opened with a two bagger, and with two out scored on Durick's muff of Burns' long fly. For the St. Joseph's Burke was first to bat. He was hit. Britt drew four balls and McGuiggan allowed George's grounder to pass him. Harris threw grounder to pass him. Harris threw high to the plate and the bases were cleared. It was then so dark that the game was called, as it would have erations at Camp Sussex assumed a more interesting and somewhat serious nature today, when the 73rd Regiment, after having reconnoitred, attempted to make a desperate attack on the camp. All the other infantry were ordered out to defend the grounds and after a sharp skirmish, succeded in surrounding and taking the enemy prisoners, bringing all their men safely to camp. Some of them, however, unfortunately lost their way in the woods and wandered about for some time, returning to camp in squads at all hours.

The Brighton Engineers had some practice today in digging, and tomorrow will make further preparations for the attack on field day, which is pricay. The troops will probably march out some distance from the camp on Friday and spend a large part of the day in the woods and on the surrounding hills. They will return in time to take the late trains for home.
