JAPAN'S FURRY

LITTLE MASCOT

God Daruma Seen Everywhere in Island Kingdom.

Used as Tobaccoist's Sign or Child's Toy — is Ornamental or Grotesque.

Many and fascinating are the legends that cluster about the Japanese god Daruma, whose red-robed figure is seen everywhere in the Island Empire. From his place on the household god shelf he looks down on the family, and as a toy he is the playmate and familiar of the children. The gods of Japan are treated by their followers with an affectionate friendliness, and a lack of reverence not in keeping with their high estate from the point of view of a foreigner—and the sight of Daruma doing duty as a tobaccoist's sign is something of a shock to our preconceived ideas of what is due to a deity. But from the huge sign of the tobaccoist to the tiny toy of the children, he runs the gamut of uses and abuses, and is ornamental or grotesque, according to the whim of the artist or the artisan. One may sit at a table and season his food with salt shaken from perforations in the sacred head, or light a pipe with matches drawn from the open mouth of his distorted countenance, and the limit of familiarity is reached when his image is used in a game similar to one seen at rural fairs in our own country, where he is a target for balls, thrown by contesting youths to knock him over.

Occasionally he is seen in a full length figure, but that represents him in his original state, and the great change came upon him which so endeared him to the popular fancy. Daruma, he it known, was a Buddhist priest and missionary, and, as tradition affirms, was the first to bring the doctrine of the great religion from India, by way of China and Korea—as so many things came to Japan. Emulating the Great Master, Siddhartha, he sought enlightenment and holiness by long periods of contemplation, silently communing with the Infinite. On one such occasion he sat cross-legged on the ground for nine years, and during that time his legs dropped off, for lack of their usual exercise. So he is generally represented as a legless body, folded in a red mantle, the hood of which is drawn up over his head. The face is heavily whiskered, the eyes dark and soft under heavy brows, and the visage altogether East Indian in type.

One must not forget to mention another mischance that befell Daruma during the period of this meditation, a mischance of world-wide significance, judging from the results. According to a vow he had taken, he was to remain awake during a certain period, that he might lose no moment in which enlightenment might befall, and as this was a large contract it is not to be wondered at that on one occasion he took a little nap. But personally he did not view this lapse with complacency. In fact, he was so disgusted that he immediately cut off his eyelids, that they might never again droop over his tired eyes. As he cut them from him in a rage—lo, a miracle! They took root where they fell, and from them a graceful shrub sprang into life.

When his disciples discovered what had happened, they gathered the leaves of the shrub and made from them an infusion which they believed would have miraculous properties. And so it proved, for when they drank of it they lost all desire for sleep. Thus came into existence what we know today as the tea plant. No wonder a representation of Daruma usually graces the tea rooms of the country!

The little figure of Daruma with which the children play are weighted, so they will right themselves when thrown down, and from this fact has grown many sayings and proverbs. He is called "The getting up little priest," and one is advised to right himself like Daruma, when he has been cast down by circumstances. "The wee ones of Japan" tumble the toy about, and shout, "Ever the little red-headed Daruma headless sits up again."

In some parts of Japan the Darumas are made without eyes, and are called blind Darumas. Eyes are eventually given them by way of reward, when they have brought good luck to their possessors. Then a paint brush supplies the deficiency. It is believed that the eyes are much desired, and that the little god will work hard to try to bring them. Some special good fortune to the owner.

A prank of mischievous children is to set a few of the eyeless ones in a row, and, selecting one of them, give him several eyes, not only in their proper place, but painting them also on his forehead, chin, and cheeks. This is supposed to be very aggravating to the sighted gods, so entirely

FRANK ROCKEFELLER

THREATENS HIS BROTHER

Can Tell Enough to Drive John D. Out of the Country But Will Keep Quiet for a While.

NEW YORK, Aug. 12.—The World published an interview with Frank Rockefeller, brother of John D., in which the former denounces the multimillionaire. The interview was secured eighteen months ago, but was held back under agreement.

According to it, the aged father of the Rockefeller is still alive, but his whereabouts is being kept a mystery.

"My father is alive and well," said Mr. Rockefeller. "He is dependent upon no man. He would scorn the proffer of financial aid from John D., and would not take it from me."

"No one yet knows that I am writing the story, the real history of John D.'s life."

"I finished it secretly here in my office several months ago, but there were imperfections in the work and I am doing it all over again."

"Rest assured that it will be right this time."

"Yes," he continued in a bitter tone, "when I make John D.'s true life history public, and explain the facts about father, this country will be too warm for its richest citizen."

"So ask John D. where our father is; tell him that I sent you and that I dare him to answer."

"But the time will soon come when I can safely speak. Then it will not be safe for John D. to appear upon the streets of any American city. He would be hunted by the people."

"Nothing but flight from the country to some foreign land will save his life when the whole monstrous truth is known."

"John D. is not a human being. He is a monster; merciless in his greed; pitiless in his cold inhuman passions. He is a God-fearing, God-serving man, and a few years ago, he withdrew himself and children from the world."

"My wife worshipped him as a girl and loves the old place, but she did not dare to kneel in prayer under the same roof with a man who knew to be a monster."

"John D.'s mood changed again, and he laughed sincerely. 'I have been vastly amused,' said he, 'by what you told me of your own search for my father in Cedar Valley. Let me tell you a fact: 'I have reason to know that John D. himself inspired the false tip that led you to Iowa. From private sources of information I learn that he has started several other misleading clues in father's case.'

"Why does he do it? Because he is mad for publicity as for money. He knows that father is absolutely safe from discovery and he takes malicious pleasure in playing with the public."

"Behind his mask of piety and kindness he laughs at all humanity. He is literally a madman who believes that he is a god who cannot sin."

"This is absolutely true," said Mr. Rockefeller in closing the interview, "and the world will find it out. With the malice of a fiend he has wrecked my business career again and again. 'But I have ferreted out every secret of his terrible life and his end is not far off. Once exposed he must literally flee the country.'

The World asserts that for eighteen months it has endeavored to locate the elder Rockefeller, but without success, and that none of his children will tell where he is.

A COFFINED MADMAN.

A Grim and Ghastly Story from Russia

Lunatic Tore Corpse From Coffin in Church and Took Its Place Himself.

LONDON, Aug. 13.—A curious story comes from St. Petersburg.

In a village church in the Edt-Koule district of Russia, a dead man's body lay awaiting the last rites.

A madman entered the building, dragged the body out of the coffin, locked it up in a vestment chest, himself took the place of the dead man, and went to sleep.

Three hours later the priest and mourners arrived and the touching orthodox service for the departed began.

The chanting of the priest and the mourners arrived and the touching orthodox service for the departed began.

The priest fell down dead with fright and the congregation fled from the church, followed by the madman.

The noble and cruel attracted a deacon to the place, who overcame with grief at seeing the priest dead, desired to offer prayers for the repose of his soul.

He went to the vestment chest to get his robe, and as he unlocked the door the corpse placed there by the madman fell on him, and he sank down in a swoon.

A few members of the congregation, who had returned, again fled with cries of horror.
