GUSTAVE HARTWIG SUSPECTED OF BEING A GERMAN SPY, ARRESTED HERE YESTERDAY

Escaped from Detention Station in Halifax—Had papers and charts of Atlantic Coast when arrested—Will be returned to Halifax.

There is at present locked up in a cell at police headquarters a young German whose name is Gustave Hartwig, and although the officials are not giving out, they know, it is believed, that Gustave Hartwig is a German spy. Hartwig has been employed in St. John and other points along the coast within the past two years and could give information to the German government regarding the city and vicinity, and especially the soundings along the Atlantic coast. He is looked on as a dangerous person to be at large, and the police department is undoubtedly fortunate in landing him.

This is not the first time that St. John police have taken Gustave Hartwig into custody. When the war broke out in August, 1914, Gustave was a deckhand on the dredge General Dias working on the Courtney Bay works. Fellow workmen were aware that Gustave was a German, and it was also suspected by some of the men that Hartwig was a German naval reservist. He talked much with the result that a police officer took him into custody, and after being examined by the proper officials Hartwig was escorted to Halifax and there placed in one of the detention prisons on an island near the entrance to the harbor. Pictures that Hartwig had in his possession at the time of arrest did not represent him to be a deck hand on a ship. It showed a very well dressed young man, clothes neatly pressed, pure white linen, a costly scarf pin in his tie and a fountain pen protruding from his coat pocket. Clean shaven and a remarkably good looking young man Hartwig presented the appearance of a clever clerk or college student.

In August, 1914, when he was taken in custody here he only remained in St. John a few days when he was taken to the detention camp at Halifax. Gustave was too clever to remain on the island and his escape from that place soon followed.

One night in October, 1914, the opportunity time arrived for him to make his escape. There were military guards stationed all about the camp, but the young German was intent on getting away or dying in the attempt, as he was very liable to receive a bullet from one of the soldiers. Stripping himself of all his clothing he tied the garments into a bundle; he fastened the bundle to the top of his head, managed to creep past the guard and silently slipped into the cold waters of Halifax harbor. He proved to be a strong swimmer, and after battling with the waves for some time he managed to put his feet on mainland.

As soon as it was learned that Hartwig had made his escape the alarm was given, but the young man did not experience any great difficulty in getting away from Halifax. In fact Hartwig was bold enough to correspond with brother Germans, who were in the mails, but there was nothing on the cards, or in his letters which would give the authorities any clue who they were from, although his signature was "Gus."

Where Hartwig has travelled during the past twelve months is only known to himself, but as far as can be judged he has been hard at work.

On Saturday afternoon the chief of police learned of a man who had signed as a sailor on board the schooner L. A. Palmer, loaded with lumber and bound for a United States port. A police officer was instructed to bring the man into headquarters for examination. Hartwig gave an entirely different name than that of Hartwig. The police next located his trunk and on a search below made articles and letters found in his possession showed plainly that he had given a wrong name, and that he was the German who had escaped a year ago from Halifax. When he saw that he had been discovered he owed up to his identity. When taken into custody on Saturday afternoon he said that he was a resident of the United States and that his home was in Eastport, Maine.

From charts and sheets of foolscap found in his possession it is plainly seen that Hartwig has been making a close study of the soundings along the coast and in the Bay of Fundy. One of the small charts which he had is a survey chart of the Atlantic coast from Sandy Hook to Cape Henry, while the other is a chart of the Gulf of Maine and the current stations. This chart shows every point along the coast from Nantucket Shoals and the Vineyard, all along the Maine coast and all over the Bay of Fundy. It gives a full description of the tides flood and ebb. On a few sheets of foolscap Hartwig had written the soundings, giving different positions along the coast and the distance between points. The writing is all in lead pencil and may only be a copy of what could have been sent away long ago.

It is expected that Hartwig will be returned to Halifax in a few days, and there is good reason to think that he is a very dangerous person to be at large.

FRANK DALEY MENTIONED FOR BRAVERY

North End Boy with 26th Battalion helps save comrades in battle.

Word was received in the city last evening that Private Frank L. Daley of High street had been specially mentioned for bravery at the front.

Private Daley, who was about twenty-four years old, left with the 26th Battalion last June, and since then has written home about every week. The last word was received on Thursday by his mother and then he said that he had been in the trenches for two or three days, but up to that time had not been hurt. Last night the word was received that he had been mentioned for bravery.

Major Brown of the 26th had led a charge against a German position and Daley and another member of the 26th, named Wier, pulled another man who had been badly wounded back to safety. Fortunately neither of the brave men were hit.

Private Daley had not had very much military training previous to his enlisting in the 26th. He had, however, served one season in the artillery when he was about seventeen years old.

A brother of Frank Daley, Chester, left St. John with the first contingent last fall as a signaller under Capt. Allan Leavitt.

A cousin of Daley, named Chalmers, was also in the 26th in the same platoon as himself and it was known that Daley was quite a bit younger and he would do almost anything for him but the despatch did not say whether it was this cousin whom he saved from death or not.

Previous to his enlisting Daley was a tailor in the city and was well known and a general favorite among his acquaintances.

BRILLIANT SPEAKER IN QUEEN SQUARE

Rev. Dr. McClain, preached to Methodist congregation last night.

Rev. Dr. Dayton E. McClain of the Methodist Episcopal church at Calais, Me., preached an eloquent sermon in the Queen Square Methodist church last evening on the subject of "Our Trusteeship."

"We have been placed here," he said, "to dress and keep the garden of life, and our standing in life depends on how we do this. The great people of the world have been great because they have been obedient."

"God brings to us today the lower orders of creation as truly as he did to Adam, and for us as for Adam the names we give them are their names for time and for eternity. We are held to a strict accountability for our trusteeship and our peace and our worth and our self-realization are entirely dependent on our acquaintance with God and the evidences of his will."

"God is the owner of the garden of life and we are simply his trustees. He will hold us to a strict accountability of our trusteeship. The obstacles and difficulties of life are overcome not by weakness but by divine strength. It is not an easy task but a glorious one with the never-failing promise of ultimate victory."

He closed with the sermon Dr. McClain cited a list of the world's eminent men who lead successfully because of strength given them from above and emphasized that the same strength is available to us.

He closed with the sermon, enforcing the thought of the sermon, the first of a heroine on the stricken Lusitania, giving up her place in the life boat for others, and the last illustration was from a book of one of our own great Canadian writers, which portrays a group of beautiful mothers waiting at the gate of Paradise for their erring sons that they might plead their cause before the Judge of the world.

He drew the illustration of the brilliant scholar, who showed that Christ was and is the pleader of our cause before the court of high heaven. Dr. McClain will address the Young People's Society of the Queen Square Methodist church this evening on the subject of "The World's Championship Baseball Game."
