ROTHESAY

Rothesay, April 13—Howard P. Wetmore, who was reported seriously ill a day or two ago, was unconscious last evening and this morning his friends have but little hope that he will rally.

Some complaint is made by the residents of Gondola Point as well as places across the river who find Armstrong's Siding the most convenient stopping place on the Intercolonial for them, that it is a difficult matter to persuade train conductors to stop and let theh off at this point. Ticket agents have refused to sell tickets to Armstrong's and passengers who have signalled the slower trains to stop have not had any attention paid to them. The trainmen say that the grade is heavy and do not wish to make the stop. The Sussex train morning and evening is about the only one the people can depend upon. There is much interest here as to the suburban and the date it will start and the arrangements of many who find this part of the country convenient and pleasant in the summer time will depend upon the arrangement made for this train.

Heavily laden teams find great difficulty hauling through the deep sand at Gondola Point from the scows landing place to the main road and the need for a road there is evident. The cost would be small. As it is now lumber cannot be hauled through the sand in any quantity and the teamsters have to carry it from high water mark to the hard ground where their teams are.

Some years ago bass fishing was quite an industry in the coves and main river of the Kennebeccasis but of late this fish seems to have deserted these waters. This morning, however, when Stanley Wetmore, of Clifton, was crossing the river on Captain Pitt's scow he noticed a huge fish floating upon the water near the boat. Striking it with a pike pole, he had no difficulty afterward in landing it upon the sand. It was pronounced a bass by the captain. It weighed nearly 50 pounds. Bass of such weight as this are pretty rare but another resident caught one in the same way a short time ago which was even larger than this.

Wild geese in great numbers were seen upon the ice in two coves this morning, some evidently feeding along the shore in the open water and others resting in their long flight to the north.

About all the snow has disappeared from the roads and many farmers have been able to get to market this week.

Rothesay, April 15.—News of the death of Thomas P. Pugsley was received with genuine regret here where he was known, it might almost be said, by every man in the parish. Rothesay was his residence in summer and at all times of the year the deceased was a frequent visitor. He was, with his father, identified with much of the improvement work that has been carried on in the village. In political campaigns he was an active worker in the Liberal interest. His genial manner gained many friends in the country who will miss the cheerful and ready greeting he used to give them when they met in the city.

The death of Howard P. Wetmore, at the residence of his mother in Clifton was announced this morning. For some months he has been in poor health, at times not expected to live, but he rallied a few weeks ago sufficiently to go to his native place in Clifton, where his two brothers and mother reside. His wife accompanied him and all his friends hoped that the change to old scenes and the pleasant spring weather would assist him on his journey to health. The change was but temporary, however, and his condition grew steadily worse until the end came.

Though the eldest son of the late D. P. Wetmore, the deceased was just in the prime of life. In early years he went to St. John and was employed in the retail grocery of George Robertson. Later he was a representative for the wholesale trade for a St. John firm and more recently for a Halifax business house. Mr. Wetmore had the happy faculty of making friends wherever he went and business men throughout the maritime provinces knew and liked him. He married Miss Munro, a Woodstock lady, a few years ago and besides his widow a mother, three brothers and one sister survive; Ormond and Stanley, both prosperous farmers in Clifton, and Wilford in the West Indies.

Mr. Wetmore's decease makes the fifth death Clifton has been called upon to mourn since the begining of the year in this family, his two uncles, Howard and James, and two cousins having passed away in that period.

Hudson Flewelling, who has been attending to his usual duties in the house of assembly during the session, arrived at his home in Clifton yesterday.
