

he is, or as the human forces, the moral ideal, after all the most important, in last ages we see man is to a large extent the creature of circumstances - From Herodotus Philos of Histy - He speaks of "man being immersed in nature" - physical conditions determining what man shall do - posture or tillage, we see in earliest ages of all that kind of development of a people was largely associated with climate & soil.
 The first industry - wheat of Egypt. The kind of trading - wheat of the Jews, the Phoenicians etc. If you come to the Romans. You do feel the extent, mastery over nature which they had. & the quite modern times the other side comes out more strongly. Men's thoughts & aspirations - come to have a far greater importance than before & they find in physical nature the means to effect their