A well-known young farmer from Ashfield Township applied here the other evening for information on reaching the United States. He was surprised to know that there was no law prohibiting him from crossing the line. He told the story of how the boys in his neighborhood evaded the officers at the Border, and reached the United States two weeks ago. He could not understand that the "National Service Card" was not a conscription card, and appeared very much excited over the war. He declared that the United States was "good enough for him," as he had no intention of enlisting, and did not propose to take a chance on being taken a prisoner, and forced into the army. He said his chums had secured him a good position. To judge from present indications, help on the farms will be scarce when spring opens up.—Reply Express

During the same period the Allies made prisoners of 22,250 Austrians. While the Russians captured more than 400,000 Germans and Austrians. The total number of prisoners taken by the allies in 1916 was 582,723.
