CAUGHT THE ROBBER

THE OFFICIALS HUNTED FOR HIM BRASS BAND FASHION.

ne Instance In Which This Style of Detective Work Succeeded Admirably-How the Culprit Was Forced Into a Confession.

How do detectives detect? It all depends. There is no rule. That which solves one mystery today will make another more impenetrable tomorrow. According to one of the most noted detectives of this country, the rule of common ase is the best to follow.

Take a case narrated by this detective. He was called up on a long distance tele-phone, which in itself is not in accordnce with the general idea of telling a detective of a crime. The message that a farmer had been robbed of $8,000 in gold and asked that an operative be sent to the town near the farm. The message was received at night. The following morning a man from the agency went to the office from which the message was sent and announced his business just as a commercial traveler would an-nounce his. Nothing in his appearance indicated that he was a man of mystery.

The man who sent the message said to im: "A farmer," mentioning his name and describing the way to the farmer's house, "had $8,000 in gold. He kept it in a box under his bed. One day while he was at work on his farm the money was stolen. That's all there is to the case." The detective hired a horse and rode to the farm. He saw the farmer, but the farmer could tell him no more than the man in town who sent the message to the city. The detective remained in the neighborhood several days, visiting other farmers. To each of them he said: "I am a detective. I am looking for the man who stole your neighbor's money.' Not one of the farmers had a suspicion of the identity of the thief. The detective learned the standing of each farmer upon whom he called. Then he returned to the home office.

About a week later another man went About a week later and told his to the same neighborhood and told his business. He was a detective from the same agency and on the same business as the first. He went to each farmer and told his business. Then he went away. The farmers talked about his visit to one

At the end of the third week another detective went into the community. Al-though he was disguised as a lightning rod peddler, he told each farmer he saw, confidentially, that he was a detective looking for the man who had stolen $8,-000 in gold. His reputation preceded him. Wherever he went farmers said, "You may be a lightning rod peddler all right, but you are a detective." And invariably he replied, "I am a detective," and all the farmers in the community talked among themselves about the lightning rod peddler detective who was in the country.

This detective suddenly disappeared.
Four weeks later another visitor came into the community. He had no business except that which he proclaimed as he traveled. He met men in the road and said, after passing the time of day: "I am a detective. I am here trying to find out who stole Farmer —'s $8.000 in gold." The news traveled. It was a new way of hunting a criminal. There was no mysterious man in disguise, but "a real, everyday man in the neighborho who said he was a detective." you seen the detective?" was as common a question as the salutation of the day.

To make his work all the more open this e said to the farmer who lost the "You will soon have all your gold back. There won't be a dollar of it missing. The man who stole it lives in the neighborhood. He will confess the

"Won't he run away before he will give it up?" asked the farmer.
The detective replied: "No. The man who runs away will thereby say to this community that he is the thief. No one in this community will dare move away."

In the words of the chief who tells the story, "Every man in the community at once felt that somehow or other he was once felt that somehow or other he was being watched. The tension became painful, in spite of the fact that only one man in the community was guilty."

Thirty-three days after the robbery a farmer went to town and asked that a detective be sent for. When the detective came, which was the next day, the farmer said to him: "Come with me and I will show you where the $8,000 is buried. I am the thief." The two men went to the woods. The snow was ankle deep on the spot where the treasure was buried. After clearing away the drift the detective dug down and found an old coffeepot containing the gold. He took it to the farmer who had lost his gold, and the farmer identified it. The detective took his prisoner back to the city, and in less than a week the man was in state prison.

city, and in less than a week the man was in state prison.

"It was a common sense rule," said the head of the agency. "Each one of the men I sent up to the community learned that there was only one man in the community who was in the habit of drinking. He had been for years addicted to period. I drunks. All of the sudden this ma. opped drinking. My men tried to get him to taste liquor, but he refused. This was our only suspicion that he might be guilty. Then I conceived the plan of having it bruited every day that there was a detective in the community. From the time I got the message until the confession there was hardly a day in which that community was not stirred up by the news that one of my detectives was in the settlement looking for the thief, and I always instructed my men to assert that the guilty man lived in the community.

"Thus the talk became the topic of the day, on the roads, in the farmhouse, on the forms. Not for an instant did I al-

"Thus the talk became the topic of the day, on the roads, in the farmhouse, on the farms. Not for an instant did I allow anybody to forget it. After the arrest of the farmer I asked him what made him confess. He said he never could hear any other subject discussed. Every time he met one of his neighbors that neighbor would ask him if he had seen the detective. He thought once of going away, but just then he heard what my man had said, that the guilty one would try to go, and that fact deterred him. It made him afraid. Every stranger he met in the road was a detective. Every knock at his door was that of a detective. He could stand it no longer. The burden was greater than he could bear, and he confessed. Rather paradoxical, was it not, that his reformation as to drinking should have made suspicion against him all the stronger? The motive explained that."

Theories are a good deal like good at.

THE DOCTOR TALLIED.

A New Orleans physician who enjoys something of a reputation as an amateur hypnotist gave a neat little object lesson to a skeptical friend the other night. They were walking together to one of the theaters, and the skeptic said: "Doctor, I can conceive the possibility of hypnotism or suggestion or whatever you choose to call it acting upon the brain of a sensitive subject and creating illusions, just as I might imagine myself ill if you assured me seriously that I had all the symptoms, but what I can't understand is how such an intangible influence can possibly produce actual physical changes. Do you believe, for instance, that a hypnotist can produce a burn by, putting a piece of paper on a subject's hand and A New Orleans physician who enjoys piece of paper on a subject's hand and telling him it is a fly blister?" "Certainly," replied the doctor. "I have seen it done myself with a postage

"But a burn is a pathological condition," persisted the other. "It means in-flamed tissue, suppuration and all that. Do you mean to say I could raise a blister on my finger by mere will power?"
"You might," said the doctor. The skeptic shrugged his shoulders and changed the subject. Later on, in the theater, the orchestra had just ended its selection before the last act, when the doctor had a slight fit of coughing. As usual it proved contagious, and other coughs began to be heard throughout the auditorium. At last the skeptic began to wriggle in his chair and finally gave a few hysterical barks. Outside the doctor took an inning. "I think I heard you coughing a little while ago," he remarked demurely. His friend looked at him reproachfully.

"Yes, confound you," he replied. "You started it, and I had to join in with the "But what made you do it?"

"Why, 1-I-well, my throat got to tickling, and I couldn't help it," admitted the skeptic. "Hum-m-m!" said the doctor. "Your throat got to tickling. In other words, there was a temporary irritation of the membrane. "I suppose so. But what are you driv ing at?

"Oh, nothing?" replied the doctor. "I was just thinking that all these phenom na seem to be a mere matter of degree. You admit that a slight suggestion can produce a slight irritation of your throat, which results in a cough. Why, then can't a strong suggestion produce a strong irritation, which would resu't in a blister? Both are on exactly the same

The skeptic could think of no immediate reply, and the doctor credited himself with one tally

CARING FOR THE HORSE.

Things Which Make the Animal Vicious and Shorten His Life.

Horses boarding in well ordered city stables are usually well cared for, but many who care for their own horses, especially the farming portion, neglect the daily equine toilet. Men who would not think of going out without having their hair combed and their clothes brushed never think of combing the horse's mane and tail or brushing his coat.

To the thoughtful owner of a good horse to offer these suggestions may be bringing coals to Newcastle, but there are thousands of people who drive a horse every day and through thoughtlessness neg lect simple things which not only make the horse uncomfortable, but render him lessedocile and tractable, lessen his working value and shorten his life. I have seen many a horse in the country that had not been curried for a year vainly trying to get some of the dust out of his coat by rolling when he got a chance. I have seen horses with the hair worn off by stiff, flat, sharp edged reins which had been put under the back strap because the loops were broken or never existed, I have seen horses with galled withers where the saddle had been moved a little where the saddle had been moved a netter farther forward or backward to bear on a fresh spot until the back was a mass of raw flesh. I have seen a mare which was so fidgety in harness and out that she was almost unmanageable and was driven with her head pulled back with an overhead check and held down by a tightly drawn martingale, while her heels tightly drawn martingale, while her heels were kept from flying up by a kicking strap. The secret of it all was that the girths were drawn as tight as if the owner had been cinching a pack on a mule's back. The horse jibed and kicked and fought against taking the four ringed bits which were thought necessary to control her and the harness, which was a cruelly devised instrument of torture, but when she was driven with loose girths and kindly treated all these "vices" disappeared and the mare was as kind as kitten.

A Question of Intent.

The most popular man in a western town ofice got into a difficulty with a disreputable tough who was the terror of the place and did him up in a manner entire to the continuous to the antire communication. tirely satisfactory to the entire community. It was necessary, however, to vindicate the majesty of the law, and the offender was brought up for trial on a charge of assault with intent to kill. The charge of assault with intent to kin. The jury took the case and were out about two minutes, when they returned.

"Well," said the judge in a familiar, offhand way, "what have the jury to

"May it please the court," responded the foreman, "we, the jury, find that the prisoner is not guilty of hittin with in-tent to kill, but simply to paralyze, and he done it."

The verdict was received with applause and the prisoner given an ovation.

"I was invited to a University club dinner and was told that I was to speak to the toast of 'Yale University.' When I arose in my turn, my fellow banqueters cried vociferously, 'Never mind Yale, old man, talk to us in Chinese.' I entered into their spirit, and for 25 minutes I orated in Chinese. What did I say? Suffice it to say that I spoke only the court dialect. The strangest part of it is that all present seemed to enjoy it even more than I did."

DR.PIERCE'S GOLDEN MEDICAL DISCOVERY

"I have been thinking of writing to you for some time," writes Mrs. W. D. Benson, of Maxton, Robeson Co., N. C., "to let you know what a wonderful thing Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery did for my little boy. He was taken with indigestion when he was a year and a half old, and he was under the doctor's treatment for five long years. We spent all we made for doctor's bills, and it did no good. He could not eat anything only a little milk and cracker, and sometimes even this would make him sick, and he got very weak; could not sit up all day, and I gave up all hope of his ever getting any better. Looking over one of your books I noticed Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery recommended for indigestion. We bought some and gave to our boy. Two bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cured him. He is well as can be, and can eat anything that he wants and it does not hurt him. He has not been sick a day since, and it has been three years since he took your medicine. I sick a day since, and it has been three years since he took your medicine. Sometimes, Mr. Holmes, 1 am almost forced, in spite of your declarations that you do these wonderful things by reasonable, human processes, to believe that you must be gifted with second sight. Now what has convinced you that your necktie is disarranged?"

"I noticed a man look at my tie just now and then feel of his own," the great detective answered.

"Wonderful! Wonderful! Only your tie is all right."

To Pack Eggs For Long Keeping.

The yolk of the egg spoils much quicker than the white. For th's reason it is important that the yolk should be surrounded with a layer of the white. If the egg is placed on the side or large end the heavy yolk will settle to the bottom and come in contact with the shell, which admits the air. If it is placed on the small end it will always have a layer of white between it and the shell. Eggs absorb fors easily, therefore only odorless materials should be used when packing them .- Ladies' Home Journal.
