Boys, let me entreat you never to so far forget yourselves as to have anything to do with slang or with low or vulgar language. To say the least, it is sure to do you no good, and may do you great harm.

Remain on the safe side and take no risk. Use the purest, best language you can command everywhere and on all occasions. This course will lead to improvement, will raise you in the estimation of all whose good opinions are worth having, and will do much toward making a man of you in the truest sense of that word.

The Great Test in Life.

The Great test in life is rather what a man can do than what he knows, says Gen. T. J. Morgan in Educator of October. Can he use his eyes? Has he good judgment? Is he a man of common sense? Can he think? Does he reason.

These are exactly the words I overheard in a small grocery store in a country village.

The proprietor and his clerk had gone to dinner, and a boy about fourteen years of age had charge of the store during their absence.

Before he spole I was very favorably impressed with his appearance. He had a bright intelligent look and quite a manly bearing for one so young.

But when I heard the above words pass between him and a customer on whom he was waiting, my opinion changed very quickly.

"Why do they keep such a boy as that?" I asked my friend as we left the store.

"Because," he replied, "fit is difficult to get rid of him. He is the son of the proprietor. He is wonderfully quick in all his studies—hasn't an equal in our school; and yet I would rather have the gollest by win his class for ace was a fall of the proprietor.
