When Wright Was Wrong.

"Are you wanting to buy a pony, sir?" inquired a red-haired man, whom Tobias had noticed hovering near him several times during the afternoon.

"I might be, if I could find one to suit me," replied Tobias, warily.

"I reckon I can show you exactly what you want," said the man, confidently.

And, as he spoke, he signalled to a lad near by, who immediately brought forward a well-shaped pony with a glossy, shining coat.

"Look there, now," continued he of the ruddy locks, "that's a good 'un if you like; quiet in all gears, perfectly sound, and not a white hair about it."

The animal was made to exhibit its paces, and as it really appeared to be what he wanted, Tobias, after some bargaining, paid the twelve pounds asked for it. It was late in the evening when Farmer Jones arrived at the "Green Man," so he did not give much attention to Tobias's purchase, which trotted towards its new abode, tethered to the tail of the farmer's gig. Arrived at their destination, the animal which seemed quiet and docile, was left standing in the yard till its owner prepared its bed and fodder; but, coming back from the pump, Tobias was surprised to find that the pony had already taken possession of the stable.

"That's right, make yourself at home," the old man said, sarcastically, and, shortly afterwards, went into the house for his own supper.

"What success had you at the fair?" inquired Mary, as in duty bound.

"Oh, I've bought a nice little animal, about the same size as the other, but a trifle darker," replied her husband.

"Cute creature, too," he continued, after a pause. "It walked into the stable as if it knew all about the place."

Mary said nothing, but thought much. A wild suspicion had entered her mind, and she determined to verify it at the first possible opportunity.

III. Early the next morning, before Tobias was up, Mrs. Wright went to the stable, and holding a carrot in her hand, offered it to the new pony.

Evidently the animal knew its manners, for it rubbed its head gently against her arm before taking the vegetable, and Mary, noting its action, wiped her eyes with a corner of her apron, and said, softly, "I thank Thee," but she was not speaking to the pony.

After breakfast, Tobias also went round to the stable; he meant to have a drive through the lanes that morning to test his new purchase.

What all the creature as it came into the yard? Did it limp? Tobias felt carefully down its hind legs, then suddenly leaned forward, and took a close survey.

"Hallo, what's this?" he said to himself.

And seizing a mop, he began to wash the pony.

He proceeded vigorously with his work for a few moments, then threw down the mop, scratched his head, and stood gazing at the animal in astonishment. Finally, he gave the pony a slap that sent it back to the stable, whilst with bent head and slow steps he betook his way to the summer-house in the garden.

There, for a while, Tobias sat and smoked furiously. Then, after much thinking, he took the pipe from his mouth, and ejaculated, "Well, I'm dalled," and that, though not very elucidatory, was the only remark he made that morning.

At noon he went in to dinner, still silent and moody, and even the sight of his favorite dish—a steaming apple-pudding—did not cheer him up.

And again he returned to the summer-house. When tea-time came, and a succulent Loch Fyne kipper, specially selected, proved as unsuccessful as the pudding had done, Mary felt that she could stand it no longer, so, like a good wife, she braced up her courage, and endeavored to restore her husband's self-esteem.

"How kind of you, Tobias, to get me such a splendid birthday present," she began.

"Eh, what?" questioned Tobias, gruffly, starting as if suddenly awakened from a deep sleep. "Give you a birthday-present? Why, I never did in my life."

"I know you meant it as a great surprise," continued Mary, valiantly; "but really, Tobias, I could not wait till to-morrow to thank you."

"Ah, yes! to-morrow was Mary's birthday; it was also the anniversary of their wedding; but Tobias had forgotten the date for years.

"What do you mean?" he asked.

So Mary had to help him a bit further.

"I peeped into the stable this morning," she said, "and found what you had brought me from Beverton—for little Toby's sake," she added, softly. A perception of her meaning dawned upon Tobias, and his spirits rose. Here was a good excuse for his action even if he had to acknowledge that for once in his life he had been "soft" (i.e., sentimental).

But how extraordinary that his wife should get such an idea into her head! He gave her a quick, suspicious glance from under his shaggy brows, but the face opposite expressed nothing save the deepest gratitude. (Good acting that, Mary!) "I thought you would like it," he declared, quickly rising to the occasion.

"You couldn't have given me anything I should have cared for half as much," said Mary, in perfect sincerity and truth.

"Don't say another word, my dear," he urged, loftily.

Whereat Mary obediently resumed her usual quietude, and was soon repaid by the total dispersion of the cloud from her husband's forehead.

The next morning she heard Tobias telling Farmer Jones that he had "bought the old pony back again to please the missus," and she could not help smiling at the prompt use that he had made of the cue which she had given him.

For it was even so! The new pony was but the old one in disguise, its coat cleverly darkened, its "stocking" blackened, and, last, but not least, its price enhanced by the addition of three pounds! Mary has never informed her husband that she is aware of his bad bargain, and, verily, her discretion hath its own reward, for Tobias is no longer so arrogant in his self-conceit.

Perhaps, after all, he guesses something of the part she played in the matter, for now he often condescends to ask his wife's advice, and, what is more—he takes it!

Down on Downey

Editor Evening Telegram.

Dear Sir,—Will you please allow me space for these few lines, as I wish to say how much I appreciate the work here just now. When the Morris Party came in power, the majority of the people in this district elected Downey as our representative. Now what I want to tell you is this: After we elected him, he could hardly see his supporters, they were nobodies. It was those that canvassed against him and those that were trying to hold private meetings in outside corners against him, who are the white-headed boys to-day and long before to-day, I tell you if Sir E. P. Morris were to send a man through the district of St. George's and take note of all that has been done here since going on four years, I don't think the Herald would say so after that, that Morris is doing well. I wonder does Sir E. P. Morris know how the River Wardens of Grand River and Little River have been treated. Perhaps it does not want to know. Why does he not send some man along now at this time of the year, to see how these animals are that he sent here for breeding purposes; how they are treated and who has got them in charge. Are these animals distributed in this settlement among the people according to the population? If not, why not? Or are they intended to be given out for bait? It is a kind of silly for the Government to be spending money in buying those rams over about Cape Breton and bringing them here for breeding purposes. We are not all too green to burn. Why not give us this money for roads and bridges, so that we can get our produce to the stations? It is true our roads are in a better condition than formerly, but they could be better if some of the money that is being squandered, were spent on roads. Now, Mr. Editor, you can easily see that I am a poor scholar and a worse writer, but I intend to keep you posted in some of those things from this out. One thing certain, Sir Robert Bond was true to his friends, for all I never supported him. But if ever he comes out in the field again, I shall be to his back and every one belonging to me. I don't believe in the two-faced party.

Yours truly,
A TORY.

CHRONIC BRONCHITIS

Cannot be cured with ordinary soothing syrups. The disease must be attacked at the root to eradicate the irritation of the lungs, heal the wounds and strengthen the respiratory organs. The composition of
