Submarines and Shipping.

New York Post: A careful reading of Sir Eric Geddes' speech of a fortnight ago on the submarine and shipping problem will supply more than one hint as to the measures which have contributed to the notable decrease of U-boat losses. Notable among defensive measures is the development of the convoy system to an extent hitherto unsuspected. In September no less than 90 per cent. of all vessels sailing in the Atlantic trade were convoyed. Since the establishment of the convoy system the loss for vessels so guarded through the war zone has been one-half of one per cent., or one ship lost out of 200 on the water under naval protection. On this point the British First Lord acknowledged "the valuable contribution made by the United States Navy since their destroyers joined us under the command of Vice-Admiral Sims." Theoretically, the convoy system was open to two objections. In the first place, a convoy of ships offered a rich target to any daring U-boat that succeeded in piercing the protecting cordon of destroyers and cruisers. And, as a matter of fact, such foats by German submarines have been reported, but obviously not with sufficient frequency to count in the total. In the second place, the convoy system would slacken the rate of ship movement by forcing down the speed of a convoy to the pace of the slowest ship. To this the answer is found in the First Lord's statement that in September the overseas sailings were 30 per cent. higher than in April.

Everyday Etiquette.

"What is expected of one who receives a friend's card bearing a new address?" questioned Ann.
"One should call if possible in the near future," answered her mother.

Fads and Fashions.

The duvety bag trimmed with several rows of chenille cord is very chic.
It seems there is no end to navy serge dresses of the semi-tailored type.
