THE LIGHT OF FAITH.

When the dark days come and the clouds grow gray
All men must brave them as best they may.
With never too much repining;
And bravest is he, when the shadows fall,
Who sees in the gloom of his darkened hall
The light of his faith still shining.
In those lonely days when his heart shall ache
And it seems that soon shall his courage break.
There is only one place to borrow,
One place to go for the strength he needs:
He must find with his faith every wound that bleeds.
And cling to his faith through sorrow.

For a man forlorn is the man who weeps
Though his dead lie buried in floral heaps.
And friends his path are lining;
And a pitiful creature he's doomed to be
If he cannot look through the gloom
The light of his faith still shining.

Inventions Suggested by Insects and Animals.

Apart from the principle of aeroplane-making, which we learnt from the flight of birds, the latter are responsible for several other inventions which man has adopted to his own use.

The weaver-bird of South Africa which builds a wonderful nest, gave us the idea of thatching. The woodpecker and the nuthatch are really living pickaxes. If you watch these birds, you will see that they cling to the tree-trunk with their claws and swing the body backwards and forwards in order to bring the beak down with greater force. This is just the position we adopt when using a pick.

Animals, and insects too, possess features upon which we have improved and adapted for ourselves.

What is more thorough than the way in which beavers build dams, so that their homes may not be overwhelmed by floods? The main principle is the same as that adopted by the engineers of all the most wonderful dams in the world.

Have you ever examined the claws of a mole? Do so if you get the chance, and you will see that they are similar in shape to a miner's shovel. And there is a good deal of resemblance in the work which both have to perform.

Hooks and eyes are one of the features of the wings of the bee. You may not know it, but bees have two wings on each side of the body. When in flight, these are hooked together and become one.

Saws are possessed by both flies and beetles. By means of the saw, the saw-fly cuts grooves in the bark of trees, to make hiding-places for its eggs. The principle of the circular saw is employed by the sawyer-beetle of South America. This insect's jaws are curved and toothed, enabling it to sever branches with ease by swinging itself round them, and cutting through the wood in a similar way to a circular saw.

The jaws of the leaf-cutter bee gave us the idea of scissors, while from the earwig we got the suggestion for pincers.

Examine the feet of a spider under a microscope, and you will see a very possible imitation of the brush and comb you have in daily use.
Another comb will be found on the bill of the toucan, that dandy amongst birds.

To the sea we might naturally go for a filter, and we find it in the throat of the whale, which lives on what it strains from the water through its specially constructed mouth.

Compare the tail of the lobster with a flexible metal pipe, and you will see where the idea for the latter comes from. The pincers used by a shoemaker are made on the same principle as the lobster's claws.

Heidelberg to Receive Help From Abroad.

HEIDELBERG—Faculty and students of Heidelberg University are rejoicing over the announcement that the institution will receive 50,000 English pounds from the estate of the late Dr. Mond, who founded one of the leading chemical houses in England and is the father of Sir Alfred Mond, who was a member of the Lloyd George Cabinet. Dr. Mond was born in Germany, but became a British subject.

Heidelberg is one of the most international of the German institutions of higher education. It had 2,500 students during the term which recently closed, about ten per cent. of whom were foreigners.

Of these, Switzerland led with 45 students, a majority of whom were taking law courses. North and South America sent six students. England had 12, Greece 11, Bulgaria 13 and Japan 16. 13 of whom were studying philosophy.

Origin of Familiar Phrases.

The expression "a pig in a poke," originated in Northampton Market, when some wag put a cat in a bag or poke, and sold it as a pig to a countryman. When the buyer opened the bag, out jumped the cat. This also gave rise to the expression, "letting the cat out of the bag."

"Kicking the bucket" is a phrase that owes its conception to the days of the great gold rush to California and Australia in 1849-51. Many unfortunate seekers after gold, losing their all in an unavailing effort to find the precious "dust," committed suicide. The suicide tied a rope to a beam in his hut. Then, standing on an unturned bucket, he would adjust the other end of the rope round his neck. When all was ready he simply kicked the bucket from under his feet.

"Worth a Jew's eye" probably came from the fact that King John extorted large sums of money from Jews under threats of mutilation. All the teeth of one Jew in Bristol were extracted to satisfy the King's rapacity.

From a corruption of the Anglo-Saxon we get the phrase, "as mad as a hatter." It has nothing to do with a "hatter," really. The word "mad" in Anglo-Saxon meant furious, angry, or even venomous, and "atter" meant an "adder or viper." Thus the whole expression really means "as venomous as an adder."

South African Budget.

(Empire Review.)

In a recent number I examined the expenditure estimates of the Union of South Africa for 1923-24, the total of which amounted to £23½ millions in round figures. Allowing for a supplementary estimate of £30,000, Mr. Burton, the Finance Minister, faced a deficit of £396,000. This was less than the deficit actually realised in the year just passed, namely, £1,353,000. But Mr. Burton proposes economics and no taxation sufficient to bring the estimated deficit down to £436,000, while some of his critics believe that he has under-estimated the buoyancy of the revenue, and that the deficit will in actual fact be far smaller still.

It is to be hoped that the critics are right, for the Union of South Africa seems of late years, like so many other nations, to have acquired the habit of accumulating deficits. The real deficit in the past three years in the Union's accounts has been over £4½ millions. The railways have an accumulated deficit of £2,300,000, and the Provinces, following the example of the Central Administration, also fall to balance their annual accounts. Large and thinly populated territories and backward industrial development make these budget problems difficult. To return to the Union estimates for 1923-24, Mr. Burton proposes to raise £130,000 by doubling the duty on watches and re-introducing the old Cape duties on patent medicines. In addition, he courts obvious criticism by introducing a series of increases in import duties on goods ranging from boots to plywood, and from confectionery to acetylene lamps. The net revenue expected from these tariff expedients is only £110,000, and one would have thought that the goal of a budget balance might have been pursued more wisely and effectively by concentration upon speeding up those economies through which, as he explains, Mr. Burton hopes to save £850,000 in the course of a few years.

Etiquette for Anglers.
Hunting, shooting, yachting, fishing—all sports have their code of etiquette, but of them all none is more generally recognized than that of angling. Anglers are one great fraternity, all of them ready to be kind and helpful to one another, but all bound by the same code of rules.

It is a very simple code, and below is a short list of these rules, which will very easily be remembered:—
1. When you see anyone fishing on the same stretch of water that you are going to fish, do not begin fishing close above him. Everyone, remember, fishes up stream, not down. Therefore begin some way below, and keep well behind.
2. If it is necessary for you to pass another fisherman when working up stream, keep well away from the bank. Remember that even your shadow on the water may frighten the fish. Trout are especially timid, but all fish are easily alarmed when the water is clear.

3. Never walk heavily near the bank where anyone else is fishing. Heavy footsteps on a bank will drive all fish to cover.
4. Never take a dog out with you when fishing. A dog will infallibly start hunting rats on the bank and so spoil both your own fishing and that of others.
5. When you are boat fishing, either on a river, a lake, or the sea, a wide berth to any other boat is largely occupied. Above all, never anchor close to another anchored boat.
6. If you are out with anyone else fishing, keep well to his left. You stand on his right hand or behind him the chances are that his boat will catch you, not the fish.
