To the Editor of the Advertisers:

A short account of the above appeared in your paper of the 3rd inst, stating that some person took a red herring from in from of J. Guymer's store, Richmond street. Your informant could easily have been plainer and given Mr. Wilson's name as well as mine. He seemed to be very extended by the red of the number of fish the gentleman took, but I think he made a mistake as to where they were taken and the number, too. The herrings were inside, not out. I did give chase and caught the thief, and thumped him, too; and if your informant had not promised to see me paid next morning I would have locked him up for his trouble. The pay did not come all the same. If the cultured gentleman choose to get under the influence of strong drink, same. If the cultured gentleman choose to get under the influence of strong drink, same if it is a poor excuse for taking other people's goods without leave. Your informant back he would tell it was all one-sided, as he got the thumps and the fish too. By inserting this in your next you will greatly oblige JAMES GUYMER.
