and the eldest child was displaced on carest tap for it.

After dinner, while Mrs. Reed was puting the place to rights, and washing up, he sook his hat and sallied out. The publications were open, and in passing the Leopard he saw some of his acquaintances sitting at the window. He went in "only just to speak to them," for his pricking conscience was whispering a warning; but they looked so comfortable and cosy with their pipes and jugs, that his old unhappy falling seized irrisistible hold of him, and down he sat, and called for a pipe o' bacca and a pint o' mild ale. Others dropped in, one by one, till at length the room was pretty full. He sat ther till 9 at night—he was unable to tear himself away—and then went home. He had not toned himself into the state of the previous evening; by no means; and he would have asserting by no means; and he would have assertly stock of money. His wife, in towering indignation, had been fretting and scolding away her Sunday evening in a most hitter quarrel closed it, which the children weke up to hear. And thus it went on; and that man, who ought to have kept his family in confort, sunk them, week by week, into deeper poverty. Such were the existing circumstances with the majority of the work-ingmen of Eastborough.

CHAPTER VIII.

Several years again went by after the date it he last chapter, for over the early part this history we can not afford to linger. Arthur was now in partnership with his ther, receiving a small share of the rolts. The promise he had given of high wellene in earlier years had not been ustrated now that he had arrived at manoud. He was indeed all that the most existent after could wish. Upon one point it. Daneshury's opinion proved a correct content of the desired and the the most existent and the same period. A letter of two passed between thom, and letter of two passed between thom, and letter of two passed between thom, and here it appeared to close, for Mr. Dare ent abroad and Arthur heard no more of im. William was in London, articled to a eminent firm on Perilament street—civil agineers. His luture destination was likerise to be the Danesbury Works, where he could take the head of the engineering dearment. The younger children, Robert and their chilings in life were to be decided in. pages was concerned; buts, so lar as its peace was concerned; but she did not say so. She leaned further from the window and watched for her father.

Mr. Danesbury was being detained by more things than one. He had been waited upon by a tenant of his, with a complaint against his younger sons. Just as the man was being dismissed, there arrived a messenger to say that Glisson was dying. She had been ill a few days with an affection of the clest, and Mr. Danesbury had been to see her; Arthur had been that very morning, but no immediate danger was apprehended. In the afternoon a change had taken place.

Mr. Danesbury hastened to the cottage. There lay Glisson in bed her eyes anxiously cast toward the door, looking for him. She was almost past speaking; almost past breathing; she feebly put out her hand as he appreached, and took his. Her lips moved, and he bent his ear down to catch the sound:

"Master! bless you!—and forgive!"

It was all she said. Whether the effort had been too much for her, or whether the minute death had come, Glisson gasped twice, and died.

"It hought you were not coming in today," was Mrs. Danesbury's fractious salutations when her husband entered.

"Where's Arthur?"

"He is gone to Mrs. Philip Danesbury's," was the reply; 'and I have been detained. Glisson is dead."

"Obend?" interrupted Isabel. "Is it not sudden, papa?"

"My dear, I thought yesterday that she would not get over it. She is gone, poor thing."

"Poor thing!" sarcastically echoed Mrs. Danesbury, I am sure it is a happy release, for herself and for other people. The death borough."

"She was not that at last, mamma, "said Isabel; "not since she came back to Eastborough."

"She took care to have beer at meals, and your papa's money going out to pay for it."

"She took care to have beer at meals, and your papa's money going out to pay for it."
"Be more charitable, Eliza," spoke up Mr. Danesbury. "Animosity may surely cease, now sie is dead."
"Are you going to defend what she did here?" demanded Mrs. Danesbury, who was in one of her most contentious humors,

"Is it late? Oh, but the others have not come in, I see. I have been with Aunt Philip."

A displeasing announcement for Mrs. Danesbury, considering that Mrs. Philip banesbury was her especial aversion; she would have barred all intercourse with her, and she dared.

"Aunt Philip has had bad news, mamma," continued Isabel. "Her brother is dead, the Rev. Mr. Heber. He caught a fever work of the isabet with the continued Isabel. "Her brother is dead, the Rev. "Eight hundred, clear and sure, for Philip Danesbury's widow, is more, in proportion, than we enjoy. She is one, and we are seven."

"On, mamma! you ought not to look at it in that light."

"If you presume to tell me what I cught or 'ought not' to do, "she retorted, "I wills send you to your room, Miss Danesbury."

Isabel's heart beat high; she leaned out of the open window to still it. Her stepmother's fits of passion had sometimes told heavily upon her.

"She is the bane of the family, is Mrs. Philip Danesbury!" Isabel thought that the family had a greater bane, so far as its peace was concerned; but she did not say so. She leaned further from the window and watched for her father.

"Remarkable Cure of Dropsy and Dyspepsia."—Mr. Samuel T. Casey, Belleville, writes: "In the spring of 1884 I began to be troubled with dyspepsia, which gradually became more and more distressing. I used various domestic remedies and applied to my family physician, but received no benefit. By this time my trouble assumed the form of dropsy. I was unable to use any food whatever except boiled milk and bread; my limbs were swollen to twice their natural size; all hopes of my recovery were given up, and I quite expected death within a few weeks. Northrop & Lyman's Vecetable Discovery having been recommended to me, I tried a bottle with but little hope of relief; and now, after using eight bottles, my Dyspepsia and Dropsy are cured. Although now 79 years of age I can enjoy my meals as well as ever, and my general health is good. I am well-known in this section of Canada, having lived here 57 years; and you have liberty to use my name in recommendation of your Vecetable Discovery, which has done such wonders in my case."
