London, Tuesday, Aug. 26.-Andrew Carnegie, who has been occasionally taking part in the controversy over Mr. Chamberlain's fiscal proposals, writes to the Times saying that an unpopular tax upon tea roused the Boston people to action which imperiled the total traffic of Boston as a seaport for a long time. Nevertheless, the tea was thrown into the bay, and Mr. Carnegie declares that he would not be surprised if Canadian preferential products in Boston harbor aroused a similar demonstration. "Nobody believes," he added, "that discrimination against American products would not be highly unpopular in Boston or anywhere else throughout the length and breadth of the Union." Mr. Carnegie regards the withdrawal of the bonding privilege from Canada as the easiest counter-stroke at hand because it would cease the same day the preferential tax by Great Britain against American products came into operation.
