Deputy Minister of Agriculture Tells of Growth of Industry in Various Parts of the Province

Causes of Development

Recent reports showed that apples, cher-ries, pears and small fruits thrived anid the climatic environments of that couh-try. Small fruits, also, could be grown to advantage. There was only one drawback to the progress of the dis-trict along the line of fruit growing, Mr. Anderson said, and that was the neces-sity of going to isome expense in the clearing of land. This was not needed in many of the valleys to be found scat-tered throughout the interior of British Columbia and, therefore, the Kootenays were somewhat handicapped. Despite this, the district seemed to be advanc-ing steadily, large blocks of land having been taken up during the past few months.

months. Another large and fertile valley, Mr. Anderson said, was that of the upper Columbia, which lies in the neighbor-hood of the Crow's Nest line. He ex-plained that it had not yet been ex-ploited to any extent, but what had been done showed that the land was good, and led the authorities to believe that with the advent of settlers it would prove an exceedingly rich section.
