TUESDAY MORNING, MARCH 27, 1883.

LABOR REPRESENTATIVES.

Byrd says some wise things with regard to labor candidates, not the least of which is that there is danger to the character of the man himself in his elevation to a position to which he has hitherto been unused.

That the reading of dime novels and the representation of blood and thunder drama in which vice is put in a light enchanting to the youthful mind, are pernicious in their effect, has been too often proved and too often allowed to stand unopposed.

The bill now pending in the English parliament, brought in by Mr. Broadhurst, the labor M.P. (for South Staffordshire, we believe) is an illustration of the use of such a member. Through Mr. Broadhurst's representations were brought before the government of the state of things in Staffordshire and Worcester-shire, in the home-making villages, where children of all ages and both sexes were working from morning to night making chains and nails, no provision being made for their physical or mental welfare.

There is plenty of work for a labor candidate here in England. If half be true we hear, there are numerous and disgraceful abuses to be rectified in our own labor colonies. Sixty-four hours a week, even in a well-ventilated factory, is too much service for minors, even supposing the labor is not heavy, but, as a manager lately remarked, "when there is little muscular strain there may be, and often is, a good deal of mental strain that is as wearing upon the system as strain of any kind."

That lottery own must be thoroughly innocent. The Rev. H. D. Hunter of London, Ont., wants us to believe that press, pulpit and people were all ignorant that the late Masonic lottery was wrong. The natural deduction is that Mr. Hunter and all the people of London are charmingly saintlike. Mr. Hunter said in his sermon last Sunday, two months after the affair was all over, after referring to the fact that he and his brother ministers failed to call attention to the crime that was being committed while it was in progress.

One thing was that he did not know it was illegal, and he believed none of the clergy did. He took it for granted that the management of the city press did not know it, and that nine-tenths of those who bought tickets did not know it. He believed that it was innocent and developed, and that thousands invested their money ignorant that it was wrong. The public mind and the public conscience were now aroused, and he believed nine-tenths of those who bought tickets for that lottery would not invest in or countenance another lottery.

In reference to the prosecutions going on, he thought that while they might be all right from a legal point of view it would have been better to let that lottery go by quietly, more especially as nothing was said against, nor even a finger raised until it was over. After allowing it to come to a head, it would have been better for the people in Toronto to let the thing alone, as people who countenance it did not know it was wrong, and had no intention of wrong doing.

Mr. Hunter is a minister of the gospel, and although we feel very much like one Thomas did on a memorable occasion, we are willing to give him the benefit of the doubt and believe that in his simple piety he really did not know there was a law against lotteries in the country. But his simple piety, his reading, if he ever reads anything secular, must have shown him the evil tendency of lotteries. Surely he knew gambling was against the law, and surely lotteries are nothing else but a species of the most open, glaring and flagrant gambling. Knowing this, and we must presume he knew it, or knowledge that he was not fit for the position he occupies—why did he not raise his voice against it and call for the enactment of a law to suppress it? Why were he and his brethren of the pulpit so mysteriously silent? The answer will probably be never known, but we very much doubt if the press will thank Mr. Hunter for insinuating that they are as ignorant as himself of his country's laws. In fact the local press that prints a summary of the reverend gentleman's discourse gives him a sly dig when it puts it to the head line.

AN UNPUBLISHED PEOPLE, PRESS AND PULPIT WHO DIDN'T KNOW IT WAS A SIN, when it puts it to the head line.

Mr. Hunter is in error when he implies nothing was said to show the lottery was illegal before the drawing took place. The World drew attention to it more than a month before the offense was committed, and did so not once but frequently. Our big neighbor, the Globe—in its fabled, decried, timorous way—also alluded to its illegal aspect. In fact, the question of the legality was not only avoided, but it was stated in all the public prints that the managers had consulted counsel on the subject. Really, Mr. Hunter, we can not help thinking that if you would be a good minister, you should keep yourself better posted on the ways of the world than you confessedly do.

The Rev. Stephen Gladstone confirms the reported intention of his father to leave the post on the Treasury bench. He says that he will retire actively from public life, and he does not think that he will accept a peerage. Having done all his work elsewhere, he will never take his seat in the house of lords.

That the reading of dime novels and the representation of blood and thunder drama in which vice is put in a light enchanting to the youthful mind, are pernicious in their effect, has been too often proved and too often allowed to stand unopposed. The whole christian and moral world is agitated on the subject, and it has, therefore, been with astonishment and regret that that world has seen such a play as Jesse James, the Bandit King, in which the life and doings of the most notorious cut-throat and robber of the day is held up for public admiration, has been allowed to be performed in towns that would shudder at the horrors of a professional boxing match. But public opinion has at last been aroused, and a man has been found bold enough to cut short the great king's career. This good man is the Rev. Melville Smith, a Presbyterian minister of Newburyport, Mass., who has caused the arrest of the members of the troupe setting the play for corrupting the morals of the young by making vice attractive. Mr. Smith can well be understood to know what he is about, for before embracing the ministry he practiced law for fifteen years in New York, and in the trial, which lasted all last week, he prosecuted the case. He charged the accused with posting on the bill boards pictures that held up robbery and murder in an approving and fascinating manner. He urged that anything that might lead a boy to murder and robbery is highly immoral and indecent under the statute. At the close of the trial the actors were bound over to await the action of the grand jury.

The glucose industry of the United States is being consolidated, the five leading concerns having been formed into the American Glucose Company. Three of them are located in Buffalo. The two remaining factories are said to be coming into the pool. How is our Toronto factory?
