WEDNESDAY MORNING, OCT. 17, 1888. RELIGION AND THE BIBLE IN

W. N. Watson's Rejoinder to the Rev. Mr. Laing's Reply. To the Editor of The World. SIR: In replying to the Rev. Mr. Laing's criticism of my letter on the "Bible in Schools," which appeared in your issue of Sept. 25, I beg to be excused if I pass unnoticed a great part of the matter of that rev. gentleman's communication, which appears to me to be wholly irrelevant to the subject I there discussed. My letter, it will be recollected, was devoted to an exposure of what I termed the specious sophistry of the only argument in favor of religion and the bible being introduced into our public schools, that, in my opinion, was of any account; and in the attempt to per form that task it will be recollected also that I, first, laid down the definitions of the terms "morality" and "religion," showing the distinction between them: and, second ly, that I denied the legitimacy of the conclusion of the argument as regards the use of the bible inasmuch as that no proofs were afforded by the users of the argument to show that the bible was such a book as e premises of the argument required to be; viz.: an adequate book for preparing the pupils for the duties of citizenship in atter life; and it was on the validity of these two points that the validity of my charge of specious sophistry rested. If the distinction which I drew between the meaning of the terms 'morality" and "religion" were correct: and ing for the bible possessing that requisite qualification claimed for it in the premises (which I have just signified) my charge of W. N. WATSON. which I have just signified in your property intelligent reasoner well knows, was fully sustained. Now, has the Rev. Mr. Laing in his reply to my letter succeeded in invalidating these two points? Has he shown that the dis-tinction I drew between "morality" and "religion" is erroneous—or, rather, that "re-ligion and "morality" meant one and the same thing? And has he succeeded in proving that the bible is an adequate book or instruction in the duties of citizenship Let us see. In (1) of his reply he says that the argument which I formulated was not the "principal argument," and then goes to work "to set me right" by posing another and entirely different argument (to which I may refer in ductions as the principal may refer in due time) as the principle argument Whatever may be the Rev. Mr. L's estimate of the relative value of the argument which, according to my judgment, was the only one I deemed of any account, and the one which he considers the principal argument, it is perhaps of little consequence, at least as an answer to my letter; but I can assure the rev. gentleman that the argument on behalf of religion and the bible in schools which I formulated has been frequently used by the formulated has been frequently used by the advocates of that measure, as he might se-by a reference to the records which we have public discussions, to newspaper controversies, private conversations, etc., if I mistake not (to be more specific), to a letter and hence I infer it is an argument considered of great importance by others if not by the Rev. Mr. L. But if your readers will take the trouble to refer to point (1) in his reply to my letter, they will find that the result of a fall from his horse, Two prime ministers may be said to have been stress on it too, although denying it to be the "principal argument" in which I required being "set right." He says (in point (1) referred to), "If parents, through their legislators, as ents, through their legislators, as sisted by the government, see fit is etablish schools for the education and religious in says of the season is approaching for the age of 57. One premier, Mr. Perceval, was assassinated in the lobby of the house of commons, and one, the earl of his p.s.

One premier, Mr. Perceval, was assassinated in the lobby of the house of commons, and one, the earl of his point (1) referred to), "If parents through their legislators, as sisted by the government, see fit is etablish schools for the education to be supposed in the lobby of the longs and throat and Lung Institute, who make a specialty of these diseases, and who use the Spiremeter invented by Dr. M. Souvielle of Paris, ex-Aide-Surgeon of the French Army, the only instrument by which medicated air can be conveyed to the lungs and throat are being cured monthly by the angeons, who, without the aid of this new and wonterful instrument—the spiremeter—would certain die. important part, viz., instruction as to right conduct. (The italics are mine.) And again: "It is time (I suppose this is again: "It is time (I suppose this is a mis-print for true), in my opinion, that the bible instruction is useful to the state, as it tends to make men honest, diligent and trustworthy, and therefore it should not be excluded from the schools," etc. How the ret. gentleman came to pen these words immediately after having entered a strong protest against my statement of the argument, in which he tries to set me right, is more than I can comprehend. For what purpose, I might ask, should the state require religious and moral instruction to form part of school education? For what purpose should it require that pupils should be instructed in the quire that pupils should be instructed in the rules of "right conduct"? And for what purpose should it require that pupils should be trained into habits of shonesty, diligence and trustworthiness. In whichever way the reverend gentleman may be inclined to answer these queries, I feel quite certain that every intelligent reader would be inclined to answer readily "for the reason that these qualities which "for the reason that these qualities which he (the rev. gentleman) has specified are necessary for the stability and welfare of human society, which it is the duty of gov ernment to maintain and promote—that they are amongst the necessary qualifica-tions of citizenship, in which it is important that every member of the community should Again, how has my reverend critic met my argument in regard to the line of demarkation which I laid down between the respec-tive functions of morality and religion? With all due respect to that gentleman's acknowledged ability, I cannot discover that he has succeeded throughout his letter in he has succeeded throughout his letter in obliterating the faintest trace of that line. The distinctions between these terms are radical and unintermingable. He says my definitions are "agnostic." Agnostic they may be to him, and I may be unconsciously affirming the principles of agnosticism. but their agnostic agnostic services and the same agnostic services and the same agnostic services are services. affirming the principles of agnosticism, but their agnosticism does not vitiate a single point of the definition. He says morality (i. e. christian morality) has to do with conduct as right or wrong, not as it is beneficial or injurious, as expedient or destructive," and in other sentences of his

he lays down, viz, that whenever he is the country." terpretation is precisely of the same nature as that which my critic wishes to facten on to agnostic moralists. He unjustly alleges that agnostic or natural morality is driven to the necessity of valuing the morality of every individual action by the amount of benefit or suffering that is expected to strike out.

the stability and general welfare of society. It matters not whatever the Rev. Mr. L. It matters not whatever the Rev. Mr. L. might say to the contrary; the agnostic acts as much under a sense of duty—as much under a sense of alliegance to a set of principles of action which nature has stamped on his mind, and on which the well-being and stability of society depend, as the christian does through the love and fear of God; and the sense of responsibility is as much in the former case as it is in the latter.

and the sense of responsibility is as much in the former case as it is in the latter. And moreover, it matters not how these sentiments which impel us to certain courses of action may have originated—whether by direct supernatural agency, as the theist will contend—or by the process of natural selection which arises out of the exigencies of society in its advancing stage of civilization, as the evolutionist effirms—an action is no less a moral action when its immediate beneficial effect is perceptible as when it is done in conformity to a law of human nature, which connects it with the well being and stability of society. Now as to my charge that the bible is inadequate as a book of instruction on the duties of citizenship I still maintain the same opinion notwithstanding my reverend critic's quotations and references, for the following reasons: First, because the paseages extractable from scriptures bearing on the duties of citizenship (good although they are as far as they go) are entirely inadequate and defective and behind the present requirements of society; and, secondly, they are utterly vicious and subversive, in many cases, of the best interests of society. These points, however, I have no present desire to discuss, I merely give this as my opinion formed as the result of fove bigation. I can points, however, I have no present desire to discuss, I merely give this as my opinion formed as the result of investigation. I can only recommend those who may differ from me on this point to study the scriptures for themselves and compare their contents with what they may consider are requirements of good citizenship in this period of the 19th century, I entertain no unreasonable hostility whatever to those portions of the bible which are good for men and for society of which portions I have no doubt there are many; but nevertheless I hold it (the bible) the bible of the process of the
