

DUNBAR, PAUL LAWRENCE, author of "Lyrics of Lowly Life."

Folks from Dixie: Illustrated by E. W. Kemble.
Cloth, 12mo.; ornamental, $1.25.

Mr. Dunbar is a writer of the African race; and this novel and suggestive fact at once places his work upon a peculiar footing of interest. He is already known to the reading world by his "Lyrics of Lowly Life." In the present work he comes before us as a successful writer of short stories and graphic sketches of negro life. His English is irreproachable, while the negro dialect part of his stories is, of course, "to the manner born." These pages are replete with humor, and redolent of human nature.

"For a sight of the Negro as he is, or, rather, the Negro and Negroes as they are, Paul Dunbar's 'Folks from Dixie.'" (Toronto, George N. Morang) "takes the cake"—to use a colloquialism of cognate derivation. Himself a Negro, the writer not only makes a point of always spelling the word with a capital letter, which is of course proper, but of keeping to the subjects of which he knows most. His "Lyrics of Lowly Life" has had a great success. In this book he shows himself the Ian MacLaren of the land that lies south of Mason and Dixon's line."—Canadian Magazine.

"'Folks from Dixie,'" by Paul Lawrence Dunbar, author of "Lyrics of Lowly Life." The remarkable success of Mr. Dunbar's poems makes the publication of this book of stories a noteworthy event. This young negro writer has achieved one of the reputations of the past year, and those who have read the stories are sincere in the belief that their popularity will even exceed that attained by his poems."—Quebec Morning Chronicle.

"George N. Morang, Toronto, has just published a book called 'Folks from Dixie,'" by Paul Lawrence Dunbar. It is made up of twelve splendid sketches of colored life in the south. Every one is well written and contains a whole some mixture of humor and pathos, and shows on the part of the author a wonderful insight into the negro character and an intimate knowledge of their dialect."—Ottawa Citizen.

EDGAR, SIR JAMES, Q.C., M.P., F.R.S.C.,
Speaker of the Dominion House of Commons.

Canada and its Capital: with sketches of political and social life in Ottawa. Containing twenty-one photographic illustrations. Large 8vo., Cloth, $2.50; Half Morocco, $3.50.

From his position as Speaker of the House of Commons, Sir James Edgar has, of course, had unparalleled facilities for obtaining data for this volume. He must also, of necessity, be able to speak with knowledge of the working routine of the institutions of government. Nor has he hesitated to introduce the human element into his book. We have here set forth the personalities of the early settlers, and the characteristics of some of the leading statesmen of the day. The characterizations of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, of Sir Charles Tupper, of Sir Richard Cartwright, will take their place, as among the most interesting of contemporary biographical sketches. The author's chapter on the Ottawa poets will be widely appreciated, while his descriptions of summer and winter sports, his review of political history, and his forecast of the future of Canada, evince not only the capacity of the chronicler but the prescience of the statesman. In conclusion it may be said that as a book of reference this work will have a permanent and distinct value, and that no Canadian library, whether public or private, can be considered to be complete that does not have a copy of it on its shelves.

"Throughout every chapter there breathes a patriotism which is calculated to inspire and to break every true Canadian that spirit of nationality which is essential to the upbuilding of a great and mighty nation. The object of the writer is to place before his readers a knowledge of the Capital of the Dominion."—The Toronto Globe.

"The work is a beautiful production from all points of view. Sir James has found time to produce over two hundred pages upon Ottawa, its political and social life, and to give an entirely impartial and thoroughly interesting account of our political headquarters, and some of the principal men there."—The Toronto Mail and Empire.

"Will take its place as a standard work. It appears to be very comprehensive and has good literary quality. It is illustrated with many fine engravings and possesses that inestimable boon—a complete and careful index."—Canadian Magazine.

"Sir James Edgar's new book on 'Canada and its Capital' contains material that is calculated to make this city the Mecca of the tourist, the sportsman and the health-seeker."—Ottawa Citizen.
