

WYETH'S BROWN MIXTURE LOZENGES.

THERE is hardly any household remedy for coughs and colds more popular, or more generally prescribed by medical men, than the old-fashioned Brown Mixture. It has for many years held its supremacy in spite of all the new remedies and innovations of modern practice. The only objection urged in its disfavor is its unsightly appearance, and liability to decompose or turn sour when kept for any length of time. It was for these reasons that we were led to devise the manufacture of the same ingredients, in exactly the same proportions, in the form of a Compressed Lozenge, which not only secures permanency and unalterability, but renders the preparation really more effective, as the gradual dissolved local action of the lozenge on the irritated organs is calmative and stimulating, while at the time, the soothing and expectorant action is thereby accelerated. In this form, it has met with almost universal favor, and is fast superceding the liquid form, so favorably and universally known.

Each lozenge contains one hundred drops of the mixture, equal to one and a half teaspoonfuls or the proper dose for a child of from four to eight years of age. This dose can be repeated every two or three hours. For an adult, a lozenge can be taken every hour or two during the day, or when the cough is distressing.

We also make the same lozenge combined with three grains of Muriate of Ammonia, which is a frequent addition made by very many practitioners. This modification renders it one of the most valuable, stimulating expectorants ever offered for use in acute bronchitis, or catarrhal affections.
