

side. However, since US National Security advisors said tests were required in order to maintain "confidence" in the weapons inventory, Mr. Frye predicted that there was likely to be no compromise on nuclear testing for the duration of the Reagan Administration.