Communicate

Invite the country to learn more about the United Nations. In addition to marking its fortieth anniversary, 1985 has also been designated by the United Nations as International Youth Year. So it is doubly fitting that young people take the lead in exploring the role of an organization that will have such a potentially significant impact on the world they will inherit.

Involving others in this exploration might take the form of a school video production, a one-day model United Nations, seminars, or a youth column in the local press. A whole range of these sorts of activities are presented as part of the two kits that can be obtained free of charge by mailing the enclosed Order Card.
