ably lost. What will follow it is impossible to divine. The ascendancy of some masterful army chief will perbecome dimmer and dimmer and they become dimmer and dimmer and they stagnate or die a natural death, Towns require resources and natural or artificial means of commerce to heighten their development. This development depends very largely upon the promoters of the town, its earliest settlers, and the faith, energy, pluck and perseverance which they manifest in perseverance which they manifest in actual work. This practical exhibition of their faith in the town is what creates the focus—that drawing power which makes all men to go where prosperity can be seen. Rival towns may sound their own praises; but the drawing power will remain with the town where the people have shown confidence in its future by making a substantial beginning and proving their belief by actual deeds. Once this focus is reached and business begins to hum, industries start and commerce is generated, the task of pulling down is too great for smaller places. down is too great for smaller places to attempt for their potency as business rivals has vanished. Business always goes where business is. Towns Are Stars of North.

The towns of Port Arthur and Fort William, which are two great stars on the north shore of Lake Superior, bear out these thoughts and are just now a great drawing power for American and Canadian capital. Joined by telephone and electric cars, the citizens can speak with each other or join in one another's company in a few moments. They ex-hibit one great commercial centre, with possibilities not exceeded by any other point in the Dominion for the next tew years, and for all time to come will the council of the board of trade yesmake it the portal to the great north-west and the arch between Ontario and A Big Expenditure Assured.

The construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway means the spending of millions of dollars in Port Arthur. Into her ports will come most of the supplies to be transhipped to the construction camps inland, Besides it will to a great extent be the supply depot for the hundreds of men employed in rail way work, temporary, no doubt, but likely only to be a stimulus to greater elegies in other directions.
