TEN THOUSAND CAVALRY WERE IN FLANDERS FIGHT

British Horsemen Magnificent, Says Toronto Hero, Who Won Promotion as Artillery Despatch Rider in Great Battle.

Toronto's pre-eminence as one of the greatest recruiting centres in the British Empire is out-cried by the achievements of Toronto soldiers at the front. In one of the great battles in Flanders a young Toronto horse artilleryman distinguished himself, who almost to the end of the war, the patriotic young artilleryman is G. M. L. Brown, son of Rev. George M. Brown of Toronto. His promotion from private to acting divisional pay-sergeant was one recognition of his daring under fire. Pathetic interest is added to his account of the thrilling experiences in action by the fact that his mother died in Toronto before her son's letter arrived. In telling of his promotion and experience as despatch rider in action, he says:

"After a brief training near the coast we started inland to the country where the big battle of Loos was fought, and by this time the division was split into sections. My section pitched camp just a few miles behind the firing line in a field, and just fifteen minutes after our arrival I was asked to take a horse and ride off with a party of the brigade and remain with them as ammunition orderly. I was suddenly transferred from my old unit to the 107th Brigade Ammunition Column. For one brief fortnight I was riding up and down with orders. I can assure you I had the time of my life.

"I accompanied my new officer on his slightly trips to the batteries, and very exhilarating they were, the no shells came within two hundred yards of us. At last, to my great pride, I received permission to take up the wagon myself, and twice in one night I took convoys up, four or five wagons all dead beat and covered with mud. Well, we camped in our advanced position three or four days and were peppered with German shells. Some fell just behind us, some just short of us. One that went over our head killed a dozen men and wounded eight more. I was one hundred yards away and rode back to see what had happened. I was not long in finding out. Altho I had no part in the actual firing I had the satisfaction of carrying orders for thousands of rounds of ammunition—trampel to sweep the infantry trenches, and other high explosives.

"From this on my work as a despatch rider practically over, and time to recuperate was offered only it's hard to get over colds and rheumatism when one sleeps in the bare ground in a wet tent, cold, dirt, vermin, lack of appetizing food, but proud of my experiences, for of the entire Division, I was the first to reach the batteries, and my new unit was the last to get away. Later it was discovered by the captain of the Brigade Ammunition Column, and my transfer from the Divisional Ammunition Column was then requested, and I was duly installed in charge of the office as acting divisional pay-sergeant. I am now in camp in the little country bounding on France, where we will stay two months.

"I occupy the end room of a hut, with every comfort one could reasonably expect, and gradually I am coming back to life. I can move my muscles without feeling binding pains and am gradually coughing my lungs free. I have been in France four months, but I have in France a bad cold, yet I have not been 'officially' sick one day."

HAMILTON SOLDIERS SEEN IN BIG PARADE

Major Bowly, Brantford; Major Dickson, Dundas; Major Burgess, St. Catharines; Capt. (Mayor) Walters.

The parade started from the armories on James street exactly upon the stroke of 2 o'clock, when the Canadian Mounted Rifles, under the command of Major Gordon J. Smith, commenced their ten mile march thru the city. To avoid a congestion of troops the authorities stationed the various battalions participating at different street corners along the line of march and as the head of the column of troops passed them they swung into their respective places in the column. The arrangement reflected great credit upon the military authorities in charge of the event, for at no time was there any confusion and the entire procession passed off without the slightest delay.

Covered 11 Miles.

In the route March thru the city the troops covered close to eleven miles and marched upon nine different streets. These streets were chosen so that the march would be approximately on a square thru the city, with the idea of permitting the citizens residing in the outskirts to view the parade without having to come down town and mingle with the crowds.

The place of honor in the parade was accorded Hamilton's returned soldiers, who, under the command of Major Buchanan of the district visitors school here, marched in strong past the saluting base, where Sir John S. Hendrie brought himself to attention as a borage to the men who have done their bit." It was one of the most impressive moments of the event. Some of the men still bore marks of the battle upon them. Arms in slings and physical scars were very much in evidence, while very near every breast showed the ribbons of at least one campaign. The applause was deafening and many a child too small to see the veterans, was held arm high by admiring parents.

The second unit to pass the saluting base was the Canadian Mounted Rifles, 800 strong, under the command of Major Gordon J. Smith. As the command of "Eyes right" rang out and the officers' arms were raised sharply to the salute, thunderous applause arose from the thousands of citizens that packed the fore and canon and rifle salutes, fired from the buildings that overlooked the park, echoed and re-echoed thru the air.

The entry of the 173rd Highlanders of Hamilton, commanded by Lieut.-Col. Bruce, was the occasion for a still greater outburst of cheers. Led by their pipers, playing "The Campbells Are Coming," the people gave way to a frenzy of excitement that only lessened when the strains of the pipes were far in the distance and their place opposite the saluting base was taken by the 205th Tighers Battalion, under the command of Lieut.-Col. R. R. Moodie. Their huge bulldog, "Tiger," that has accompanied their organization on many a victorious field, clothed in black and yellow, caused many a comment.

Much interest was occasioned by the 47th Battery of Toronto, which took part in the parade. The parade strength of the battery was 135 men and four guns.

The overseas battalions were followed by the local militia regiments, the 13th Royal and the 91st Highlanders, which under the command of Lieut.-Col. Robertson and Dalley respectively, totalled 500 men in uniform. A feature of the 13th participation was the fact that Sir John M. Gibson, brigadier-general, who is honorary colonel of the 13th, marched with the unit of the saluting base, where he fell out and joined the staff officers in the stand.

Home Guards.

With the march past of 400 members of the Hamilton Home Guard, under the command of Major Powis, the most massive and pretentious military gathering that ever enthused the citizens of this city, was brought to a close. The following overseas units and their respective commanders took part in the parade: Canadian Mounted Rifles,

DR. THOMAS W. SPARROW DIED AT HIS HOME

Veteran Physician Saw Service in American Civil War.

Dr. Thomas W. Sparrow, who practiced medicine in this city for more than 35 years, died at his home, 44 Spencer avenue, on Friday. The late Dr. Sparrow was a son of the late Thomas Sparrow, who was at one time city treasurer of Galt, and clerk of the division court, the family being well known in that section of the province. He was 82 years of age. At this time it is interesting to note that Dr. Sparrow acted as medical examiner during the American civil war for the northern forces. He is survived by the widow, three sons and two daughters.

ITALIAN LABORER KILLED BY TRAIN

Louis Trilli, aged 37, an Italian laborer on a C.P.R. construction camp at Swanton, was instantly killed by a C.P.R. passenger train from Hamilton while crossing the tracks on the lake shore at 9.15 Saturday morning.
