Women In New York Society Affect Evening "Dress Suits"

NEW YORK, March 18.—(United Press.)—The high cost of evening gowns and accessories is said to be responsible for the wearing of "dress suits" by certain females in smart society. Last week at one of the smartest New York dance clubs two young ladies appeared in black dinner jackets with white voile shirts, white pique waistcoats and white satin stocks. Their skirts were short, braid-trimmed, creased, and of black material matching their dinner coats. Black patent pumps and black cloaked hosiery were thrown in for good measure.

And, peculiar to state, these mannish garb females had quite as many partners as did their fluffily garbed sisters. On being asked why she wore such a costume one young lady said that she couldn't afford to keep up with the luxurious evening styles worn by modish women of her set. She asserted that a dress suit will last several years and that it is the only sane evening garment for the business woman.

One is quite accustomed to seeing women in mannish attire in New York. At a theatre in the Greenwich Village section a modernistic play is being produced which has a ball room scene in which a young lady dances among her tulle-garbed girl friends in full masculine attire, dress suit, monocle and skirt, studs, etc.

The present craze for mannish hair-cuts is partly responsible for the trend toward mannish evening clothes. Wherever smart women gather there is bound to be at least one woman with the closely clipped bob.

"Abe" Mitchell Has Improved Iron Play

LONDON, March 18.—Abe Mitchell, the country's leading hope for the recovery of the British open golf championship from the United States this year, has so improved his iron play during the past winter that he is enthusiastically talking and writing about his discovery of secrets of style.

Mitchell has been unable to keep his iron shots from drifting to the right of the greens. Instead of using a square stance he had previously employed, he drops his left foot back slightly and advances the right, and he claims his iron play has greatly improved.

There is evidence that aphids, which infest so many crops, may carry plant diseases from one family of plants to another distinct family.
